To Unload Wheat, Cotton. Poor Britain Must Borrow. The Long-Distance Plane. They Jailed a Lord.

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

PRESIDENT HOOVER suggests to Germany she buy our wheat and cotton on long-time payments. Germany had not replied when this was written yesterday. It seems a good idea. We have a surplus and do not know what to do with it. To move a few million bales and a few hundred million bushels would be a great pleasure even though the "long term" credits should prove to be VERY long.

FARMERS WILL ask "Could you move wheat and cotton held by the Farm Board to Europe by moving ours [illegible] now, letting Germany pay [illegible] later?"

Merely [illegible] man's purchase would be better than nothing and good for Germany, if she needs the goods. But money from our farmers for cash would please them better and save some of their mortgaged farms from the sign "This Farm Operated by the Blank Insurance Company."

Prices to Germany would have to be very low to make it worth while and our payments would probably be without interest. But the President's suggestion seems excellent, sending what we cannot use to Germany that needs our surplus. We might even add oil and gasoline to [illegible] offer, and steel, automobiles, sugar and a few other things.

Our sarcastic Russian friends will ask "did we hear anything in America [illegible] about dumping?" But they can't please the Russians [illegible]. They do not [illegible] high spirited finance.

WAR DOES NOT PAY. Each country is realizing it. Britain knew it from the start, since their job was providing money for all their allies and borrowing from us.

Now it is their turn to admit that a serious crisis is near. Even a government by union labor has not been able to lift itself by its financial bootstraps.

MacDONALD is said to have arranged a loan of $250,000,000, half from the Bank of France, half from our Federal Reserve.

Borrowing from France must be a little bitter for Britain, which lent billions to France in the war, and still has them owing. Borrowing from us, of course, is an old story. It would be interesting to know on what basis our share of the $250,000,000 will be repaid, also what basis for our wheat and cotton bill from Germany.

You would think the nations would say "no more war," and mean it, but you would be mistaken.

RUSSELL BOARDMAN and John Polando started useful competition when they broke the world's non-stop flying record, hopping more than 5,000 miles from New York to Istanbul on the far edge of Europe.

BRITAIN will try to take that long distance record away from us, sending two pilots of the Royal Air Force at once to fly, without stopping 5,900 miles from England to Cape Town in Africa.

SUCCESS TO them.

What the world needs is a ship that will fly nonstop around the world, and it will come in less than 10 years.

Uncle Sam with his Army engineers, assisted by aviation specialists, could do it in five years but he does not seem interested in engineering on his own account. It is so much easier to rely on others.

THE DIESEL engine may solve the problems of long distance and safety and the Packard Company, Mr. Sloan of General Motors, and Henry Ford, are all experimenting along that line.

Thank Heaven for private initiative, since our government prefers the old rule.

AFTER THE "around the world and back again" plane shall have become a matter of course the next question will be "what about the moon."

But with all respect to the rocket makers, that journey will hardly occur. Man and his feeble brain are put to work on this earth and will stay here until sun and earth freeze up and we move on to another of the "many mansions" some hundreds of millions of years hence.

IN LONDON, Lord Kylsant, head of the Royal Mail Shipping Company, is sent to jail for one year. Guess why.

In his report mentioning the income of his company, he failed to say that it was not NET income. That failure might deceive the public into buying shares, so he might go to jail.

DID GOOD OLD WALL Street ever hear of anything as funny as that? Did the ghosts of dead speculators and dead stock companies that whisper their reminiscences at midnight around the steeple of Trinity Church, ever dream of anything so preposterous.

Lord Kylsant should move over here, where he would be on his yacht instead of being in jail. Our motto is CAVEAT EMPTOR, spelled in capital letters, and meaning roughly translated "let the little fish take care of themselves."

GOV. TEJEDA, of the Mexican state of Vera Cruz, who passed a law limiting the number of Catholic priests to 13 for a population of one million, makes a savagely anti-Catholic statement to the New York Times correspondent. The governor was shot through the ear, the bullet narrowly missing his

LINDBERGHS UNREPORTED OVER WILDS

Towns in Northern Canada Watch in Vain for Sight Of Aerial Vacationists.

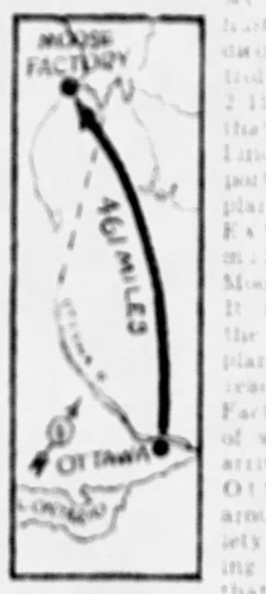
Colonel and Wife Believed Safe at Isolated Goal; Radio Only Communication

Universal Service

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 1.—Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh were this evening believed to have reached Moose Factory, although no word of their landing had been received.

When the Colonel and his wife took off from Rock Cliffe airport here at 10:50 a. m. (Pittsburgh time) they said they expected to make the 500-mile hop northward on their vacation flight to the Orient in about five or six hours.

The last message flashed from the Lindbergh plane by Mrs. Lindbergh, who was at the radio set while her husband handled the controls, was at 2:15 p. m. At that time Mrs. Lindbergh reported their plane over Lake Kesagami 140 miles from Moose Factory. It is presumed the Lindbergh plane has since reached Moose Factory. Failure of word of their arrival to reach Ottawa has aroused no anxiety here, it being pointed out that the plane's radio set cannot be operated while it is on the ground and that telephone and telegraph facilities do not exist at Moose Factory.



One Day's Hop

Prime Minister Bennett has asked to be informed immediately news of their arrival is received. The Lindberghs plan to leave Moose Factory tomorrow or Monday on their flight across the barren lands of Canada's Far North to Alaska and Japan.

The take-off from Ottawa was perfect despite the fact that a

Laura Ingalls Tells of Plans For Sea Flight

MISS LAURA INGALLS

Success Depends on Utilizing Science, She Asserts

In the following exclusive article Miss Laura Ingalls, diminutive 26-year-old flier, discloses her forthcoming attempt to fly from New York to Paris.

The noted aviatrix received her transport pilot's license from the Department of Commerce in April, 1930—the first woman to achieve this official recognition. One month later she set a woman's record of 980 inside loops. In August, 1930 she made 714 barrel rolls, a record for both men and women, and in last year's Chicago air races Miss Ingalls won second place.

These triumphs were followed by a flight across the continent and return, which Miss Ingalls was the first woman to accomplish.

By LAURA INGALLS

Since Charles A. Lindbergh blazed his glorious trail across the Atlantic there has been a tremendous advance in the science of aviation. The inherent hazards of flying the North Atlantic, for unfavorable winds, storms, poor visibility, are still the same, but man has devised new and better means of combatting and overcoming these obstacles.

The fact that a woman undertakes a solo flight from New York to Paris with a supreme confidence that is shared by many others is inspiring proof of the scientific progress which aviation has made. We are indeed four years beyond Lindbergh's epic venture. He dared the unknown single-handed and succeeded with a fine completeness. I am not daring the unknown. I am dealing with known obstacles which we know can be conquered by the numerous aids which were denied the pioneer trans-Atlantic fliers.

CHECK DEVICES

Proper preparation for such an undertaking is as important as ever, if not more so. Each new device must be checked and rechecked to assure that it will serve efficiently the purpose for which it is designed, to make sure that it functions as an individual unit of the plane and as an integral part of the whole. Flying is a matter of precision, and the new precision instruments are a great help. For weeks I have been putting my plane through various tests. In this work I have had the advantage of the advice and assistance of Mr. W. P. McFail, of St. Louis, who was the director of

POISON RUM KILLS TWO ON NORTH SIDE

Death Toll Taken as Park's 'Cleanup' Drive Netting Fines for Three Wanes.

Fatalities and Drinking by Children Spur Walsh Order For Action by Faulkner.

The North Side's second death from poisonous liquor within 24 hours was recorded yesterday on the heels of Friday's "cleanup" of that district by District Attorney Andrew T. Park and Director of Public Safety James M. Clark.

Three minor raids were the net result of the "cleanup" to date. Two men arrested as the alleged operators of the dives were fined in Morals Court yesterday, one $75, the other $50.

CHILDREN INTOXICATED

The cleanup followed charges made by a 12-year-old Bellevue girl who told police that she had been supplied with liquor at a place known as "The Gunny Sack," one block from the Woods Run Police Station. Three girls and two boys were arrested early Friday staggering around West Park intoxicated by cheap moonshine liquor.

These two incidents led to the cleanup order.

The alleged proprietor of "The Gunny Sack," John White, of Creedo way, was fined $50 in Morals Court Friday by Magistrate Thomas D. Jones. White denied owning the place and said he had not sold liquor to children.

The two men who were arrested in yesterday's raids were Irvin White, 37, charged with being the proprietor of a moonshine dive in Cremo street, and George Saporchaik, alleged owner of a Preble avenue place. White was fined $50 and Saporchaik $75 when arraigned before Magistrate Jones yesterday morning.

TWO MEN ILL

They had not been out of Morals Court an hour when the death of Andrew McCarroll, 51, no home, was reported from Allegheny General Hospital. The cause was given as acute alcoholism. Morgue attendants said the

What Are You Going To Do About It?

GOV. ROOSEVELT PRESIDENT HOOVER MAYOR WALKER

The President and the Federal government have power in themselves and power to co-operate with the state governments to end lawlessness in the United States.

What is the Federal government going to do about the carnival of racketeering and the gang murder question?

Is Mr. Hoover going to appoint an alibi commission, as he usually does, to avoid any action, or is he going to do his duty?

Mr. Mussolini has driven all Mafia and blackhand murderers and blackmailers out of Italy, and the United States is giving them refuge.

This country is a haven for criminals of all nations.

What is the Federal government going to do about it?

Congress can pass laws constitutionally to deport every alien with a criminal record and every undesirable resident in this country.

Why doesn't Congress do this?

Present laws are sufficient to deport many undesirables.

Why doesn't the Federal government act adequately and immediately to deport them?

Why does not Mr. Hoover do his duty?

Why does not Congress do its duty?

Why do not the Federal authorities do their duty?

Has everybody in Washington got Hoover sleeping sickness?

Is everybody in Washington thinking of advertising himself in European conferences and complications?

Isn't anybody thinking about the United States of America?

Isn't anybody thinking about the American people who put these chairwarmers in office and who pay them their salaries?

These publicity seekers do not have to go abroad to find wars and disasters.

There is war going on right here in the United States between the criminal element of the population and the decent citizenship.

And the criminal element, up to the present time, has been winning the conflicts.

These criminals shoot down people in the street, they levy tribute on honest businessmen, they abduct women, they slaughter children, they corrupt law enforcing machinery, they buy judges, they subsidize political organizations, they terrorize decent citizens.

If there is war between respectable citizens and the criminal classes and the criminals are winning it, what are we American citizens going to do about it?

Apparently our paid officials are not going to do anything.

What are we going to do about it?

Mr. Hoover says let the states take care of themselves and let the cities take care of themselves, which means let the people take care of themselves.

Don't expect any aid from the Federal government, although the Federal government has power to help.

It is too busy meddling in foreign affairs, too busy attending European conferences, too busy appointing alibi commissions to do anything.

What do you think Theodore Roosevelt would have done in this emergency?

Would he have sat in his easy chair and told the people to take care of themselves?

Don't you know that he would have gotten together with the governors of the states in which these outrages against American liberty and safety were occurring and would have had martial law declared and would have notified every gangster if he were not out of the country in 10 days he would be tried by court-martial?

Not by corrupted judges under protracted processes of law and with crooked lawyers to make mockery of justice, but by court martial, swift and sure with its drastic penalties.

Roosevelt, unhappily is not here and chairwarmers and salary check signers advise people to take care of themselves.

Do we have to fall back on vigilance committees?

Would not martial law be better than utter lawlessness?

Do we have to meet lawlessness on the part of criminals by lawlessness on the part of the community?

Cannot the American people depend for protection upon their President or upon their Mayors or upon their Congress, or upon their law machinery and their laws?

Is the country capable of self government?

That is the real question.

That question is a vital one.

The situation is a crucial one.

Our whole republican system is under arraignment.

Mr. Hoover, what are you going to do about that question?

Will you please get your mind off the foreign countries, where you have spent so much of your life, and concentrate it on America where, at least, you were born?

What are you going to do about it, Mr. Franklin Roosevelt, who have patriotic Roosevelt blood in your veins?

What are you going to do about it Mayor Walker, night mayor of New York?

Come down to your office in the day time and do something.

Get together, all of you, and do something.

It is time for this social question to be solved, time for decent citizens to win the war against criminals, time for peace and safety and liberty to be re-established in the United States.

CALL DOCTOR BY AIRPLANE FOR EDISON

Inventor Collapses, But Recovers and Is Resting Quietly, Physicians Say.

Condition 'Critical' View Of Son; Suffers From Nephritis and Diabetes.

International News Service

WEST ORANGE, N. J., Aug. 1.—Thomas Alva Edison, the noted inventor who is ill at his home here, tonight was reported to be "resting quietly."

Three doctors, hurriedly summoned to the bedside of the 84-year-old genius, issued the following statement:

"Mr. Edison has been failing in health since his return from Florida six weeks ago. He is suffering from chronic nephritis and diabetes. The diabetic condition is now under control and the kidney trouble seems improved as compared with a week ago. This afternoon he suffered from a sudden collapse, but at present has recovered from this and is resting quietly.

"Frederick M. Allen, M. D.
"Hubert S. Howe, M. D.
"William B. Williams, M. D."

Reports have been current for some time that the aged inventor was ill, but they have been persistently denied by members of the family who insisted that his usual activities in the laboratory were curtailed only by the heat.

SUDDEN COLLAPSE

Encouraged by his more moderate weather [illegible] Mr. Edison decided on an automobile ride, and was about to leave the house to enter the car when he collapsed.

Several members of the Edison family were assembled at the home here awaiting the report of the three physicians and they appeared considerably relieved when the formal announcement indicated that his condition was not immediately serious.

Dr. Howe, one of the consulting physicians, was playing golf on Long Island when he received a telephone call to hurry to the bedside of the inventor. So urgent was the call that he chartered an airplane at Port Washington, L. I., and flew to Newark, where he was

DREW TO DELAY RESIGNING POST

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 1.—Judge James B. Drew of Pittsburgh announced today he does not intend to resign as a member of the State Superior Court, to become a justice of the Supreme Court by appointment of Gov. Pinchot until the latter part of September.

This action by Judge Drew will result in the man the Governor appoints as his successor on the Superior Court serving until January, 1933.

If the jurist had decided to quit the Superior Court before next Tuesday, over three months in advance of the election to be held next November, his permanent successor would have been elected then. In such contingency the state committees of the Republican and Democratic parties would have made nominations and the candidate elected at the polls would have been seated next January.

GRANDMOTHER HELD AS BANDIT

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—(INS)—Accused of participating in some 25 holdups during the last three weeks, Mrs. Anna Baranski, 57, a grandmother, was jailed tonight a few hours after her son, Jack, 35, had been shot and killed by a policeman who pursued him following a robbery.

Mrs. Baranski, police alleged, acted as automobile driver for her son and his accomplice in a hold-up tour.

The automobile crashed into a building shortly after a real estate office had been robbed. The son, known also as Jack Durant, fled as did his unidentified accomplice.

Policeman Frank Kritschmer pursued the son and overtook him. The bandit drew his revolver, but the policeman was quicker.

The accomplice escaped.

Mrs. Baranski, according to police, confessed her part in the 35 robberies.

Records showed her son had been paroled last Christmas from the state penitentiary at Jackson, Mich., where he had served eight years of a 15-year term for robbery with a weapon.

Mae Murray Says Prince Beat Her; Asks Divorce

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 1.—(AP)—The long and apparently happy romance of Mae Murray, dazzling blonde of the screen, and Prince David Z. Mdivani came to an abrupt end today when the actress filed suit for divorce in which she revealed many alleged instances of cruelty and beatings.

The suit surprised friends. It was learned they separated only yesterday.

The complaint was based on charges of extreme cruelty, the first alleged instance being more than three years ago. The actress charged the prince had pursued "a continuous course of inhuman and cruel treatment," inflicting "grievous bodily injuries" and "grievous mental suffering."

She also charged that the prince had threatened her with a revolver. She asked no alimony, but petitioned for custody of their 4-year-old son.

The couple married in Beverly Hills June 28, 1926, after they had met while she was traveling in Europe. The prince has two brothers, one of whom, Prince Serge, recently married Mary McCormic, the opera singer, following a divorce from Pola Negri. Miss Murray has been married twice before, once to an actor, Jay O'Brien, and the second time to Robert Z. Leonard, director.

ONLY 25 VOTING MACHINES HERE

With 13 days left to deliver the 1,075 voting machines that are supposed to be installed for the primary election, the Poole Engineering and Machine Company of Baltimore must soon start shipping them at the rate of 100 a day to complete their contract.

The contract calls for delivery of 1,100 machines August 15. Only 25 machines have been received by the County Elections Bureau but a "large shipment" is supposed to arrive this week according to Gilbert C. Cloonan's assurances from company representatives.

The commissioners have ordered complete supplies for holding the entire election with old-fashioned paper ballots. County Commissioner Charles C. McGovern declared last week that he will brook no further delay in delivery and if the Poole Company asks further delay will ask forfeiture of their $100,000 bond.

N. Y. Pushes War Against Gangs

By JAMES L. KILGALLEN
International News Service

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—Crack-shot policemen spurred by Commissioner Edward P. Mulrooney's "shoot-to-kill" order against gangsters who are running rampant in New York, patrolled the city's streets tonight in search of hoodlums and gunmen in a determined attempt to stop the current violence.

Indignation over the action of the gangsters in shooting down five children, one of whom died, has mounted to a high pitch. The feeling against the gunmen was accentuated by another shooting in the same district, the Harlem section of Harlem, which resulted in the wounding of two men, one of them an innocent bystander. The gunmen are conducting their warfare in crowded streets and in defiance of the police.

Commissioner Mulrooney's curt command to give no quarter and "shoot above the waist" has had a pre[illegible] effect. In the last 24 hours four thugs caught in the act of committing holdups have been wounded, one of them so seriously he may die. The new 24-hour patrol, the most effective armed force ever sent on the streets, will continue until the gunmen are driven to cover.

While the police patrolled Harlem's "Little Italy" today, that district in its own lavish and pathetic way, buried 5-year-old Michael Vengalli, the boy slain by

WIRE OVERLOAD BLAMED IN FIRE WHERE 45 DIED

Coroner Says Evidence Shows Fuse Tampering to Operate Floor Polisher.

An overloaded electric switchboard to permit operation of a floor polishing machine was declared by Coroner W. J. McGregor yesterday to have been "the probable cause" of the fire which raged through the Little Sisters of the Poor Home for Aged, Jan. 24, resulting in 45 deaths. He said evidence as to the condition of the switchboard would be introduced at the inquest which opens Tuesday.

Coroner McGregor declared:

"This evidence will indicate that the switchboard controlling the wiring system had been tampered with in such manner as to cause over heated wires, thus igniting the flooring of the storeroom in which the automatic electric floor polishing machine was kept.

FUSE TAMPERING.

"The evidence, bearing upon a makeshift manipulation of the switchboard fuses in order to operate the high powered floor polisher on a switchboard equipped for a low-power lighting system, is of the utmost importance as not only a probable cause of the fire, but as an educational warning to the public."

McGregor said his chief witness, James L. Davidson, would give in evidence the switchboard of the Little Sisters home and a small piece of copper wire that McGregor believes burned out the fuse and permit further voltage. The two men who had charge of polishing the floors will be questioned, he asserted.

CHIEFS TO AID

In the absence from the city of Fire Chief Richard L. Smith, the coroner said he would ask Assistant Fire Chief Frank Jones to sit with him as co-magistrate at the inquest, and would call other fire chiefs to testify. Testimony.

Fire Chief Smith has stated his belief the day after the fire that spontaneous combustion from oil and dust in the floor polishers was the likely cause.

Eight unclaimed bodies in the morgue will be buried tomorrow morning in Calvary Cemetery following solemn high mass of requiem in St. Paul's Cathedral. The eight have been identified as Daniel O'Shea, Anna Carroll, Patrick Lannahan, Louise Marquez, James Dekouris, Clara Lenz, Ellen Callahan and Hugh McAvoy.

BUILDING PLANS

Catholic laymen of the Pittsburgh diocese will meet this afternoon in Synod Hall Cathedral to further plans for rebuilding the home, located at Penn and Aiken avenues. Priests of the 450 parishes have pledged $50,000, Bishop Hugh C. Boyle announced. The general campaign, headed by J. Rogers Flannery, chairman, and J. Dawson Callery, treasurer, will be held August 16 to 23.

The priests' solicitation committee consists of the Very Rev. John P. Gallagher, of St. Raphael's Church, chairman; the Rev. Ralph L. Hayes, of St. Catherine's, Beechview, secretary; Father Lawrence A. O'Connell, Epiphany Church, treasurer; Fathers Leonard Stenger, St. Basil's; Thomas F. Slewinski, Holy Family.

AIDES APPOINTED

The general committee will make the public appeal while the committee composed of priests and aided by laymen from the various parishes, will conduct the campaign in each. Flannery and Callery will be aided by C. A. O'Donnell, M. L. Benedum, Joseph H. Bialas, Bishop Boyle, Joseph Buffington, James Francis Burke, John F. Casey, J. C. Chaplin, F. J. Chesterman, Louis S. New York Airplane Service Augmented

A new schedule to lower the flying time between Pittsburgh and New York by 25 minutes has been announced by James D. Condon, vice-president of Pittsburgh Airways, Inc. An addition of two flights a day to the present four-a-day schedule will become effective Wednesday, he said. The increased service has been made possible by the purchase of three new all-metal planes.

Flying time will be an hour and 50 minutes with no stops between the cities.

SHAW IN BERLIN PREDICTS DOOM OF CAPITALISM

'Torture to Get Back,' Says Playwright After Visit to Russia With Lady Astor.

BERLIN, Aug. 1 (AP)—George Bernard Shaw arrived at Schlesischer station today bringing the message from Russia that capitalism is doomed.

As he descended the steps of his sleeper, looking fresh enough to indicate a pleasant night's sleep, Shaw remarked that it was "torture to get back." He said:

"After having observed communism on the spot, there isn't a chance left for capitalism.

"It won't be long before Russia will get on her own feet.

"She is training her own men now and soon she will be entirely independent of foreign help from such persons as architects and engineers."

LIKES MOVIES

He thought, however, that in its present state communism was not suited to the rest of the world.

Most of the theaters were closed when the Irish playwright was in Russia, but he saw a few movies. He liked them, he said.

Shaw, a vegetarian, was immensely satisfied with the Russian diet. He said:

"Food was good and there was plenty of it. The black bread and cabbage agreed splendidly with me."

He spent about 40 minutes at the station here, most of the time being occupied by the task of getting his one suitcase and topcoat transferred to a taxicab and making arrangements to stay until this afternoon with Lord and Lady Astor and their son, who also made the Russian trip.

DISMAYED AT AMERICA

The American-born Lady Astor said she was dismayed at the state of affairs in America, referring in particular to the sentence of death imposed on eight negroes in Alabama convicted of assault on a white girl.

She said she wanted to see Berlin's new cooperative buildings for the poor during her stay here.

A microphone waited for Shaw at the station door. He tried to escape it and made for a side entrance but finally was induced to stand in front of the instrument.

This afternoon Shaw and Lady Astor left for London by way of the Hook of Holland. They had visited the German building exposition.

'Barkers' Arrested Near Market House

A police drive against merchants barking their wares in the Diamond Market House district resulted in the arrest of four men yesterday afternoon.

Those arrested and released under $10 bond each were Joseph Aiello of 71 Minoka street, Robert Aguglia, 1218 East street; Samuel Giovenzo, 1806 Beaver avenue, and Gabriel DeAndrea, 121 Robinson street.

A. Mamaux and Son, manufacturers and distributors of awnings for 66 years, filed an equity action in Common Pleas Court ... to restrain Isaac A. Mamaux of ... as Mamaux Awning Company, Mamaux Manufacturing Company and Mamaux Pittsburgh Company from using the name Mamaux.

The name has been established among the public in connection with the making and selling of tents, awnings, flags and kindred wares by the plaintiff company since 1865 and last year the defendant engaged in a similar business registering three firm names with the use of the name Mamaux, the suit averred.

Uruguay to Ban Bulk of Imports

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay, Aug. 1 (AP)—Prohibition of the importation of all articles that are not of prime necessity or are replaceable by domestic products was advocated today by President Gabriel Terra.

The financial crisis resulted today in the closing of the Montevideo branch of the Anglo-American Bank, which has been operating more than 40 years.

Huge Sunfish Taken 2 Years from Home

MANTOLOKING, N. J., Aug. 1 (AP)—A 1,900-pound ocean sunfish was caught yesterday in nets cast by fishermen from two power fishing boats. Staff members of the Smithsonian Institution, who were called to mount the skin, said the fish ordinarily inhabits the waters of the Pacific Ocean and he must have swum around Cape Horn, a trip which probably took two years.

Million Is Made In Corn, But Not by Farmer

By ARTHUR "BUGS" BAER

The ... dollar ... chokes ... that.

How about that fellow who made a million out of July corn?

Is he a farmer? No, he ain't even a scarecrow.

He's a middle man. Jimmie and he hasn't ever been closer to a farm than Heflin has been to the Republican nomination.

He hangs out in LaSalle street, Chicago, with the grain mob. The farmer plows the field, plants the corn, fans it with his hat, prays for rain, mortgages his barn and works himself bowlegged.

If you don't get a sunstroke a day in Kansas your neighbors think you are a loafer.

And when the crops are harvested, who gets them?

The farmer? Nope. The middlemen bought them the winter before in LaSalle street. An ordinary laboring man can change houses once in a while, but the farmer is always working for Barney.

It makes no difference to the farmer who gets his crops. If it ain't the middleman it's the grasshoppers, and sometimes they both fuck out the same visiting day.

Does the farmer make any money out of July corn? He does not. That's because he's got it in July instead of having it in winter when there ain't any.

LAURA INGALLS TELLS OF PLANS FOR OCEAN HOP

the Universal Flying School when I took training there.

These tests involve more work and require more time than the layman appreciates.

There is no definite date for my take-off from New York to Paris, with a brief stop at Newfoundland for refueling. I will go when all the tests show that everything is what everything should be. There are 3,700 odd miles to be covered in about 24 hours of continuous flying. Twenty-two hundred miles over water. Somewhere [illegible] blind flying [illegible] to be encountered [illegible] must be [illegible] start.

My plane is a Lockheed Air Express, powered by a Pratt and Whitney wasp motor. I chose this plane because it seemed to my satisfaction that for the purposes of this flight it was the most efficient for speed, stability and ability to get off with a heavy load. There are faster Lockheeds but they are not so [illegible]. There are planes which will fly more but they are not so fast. In the Lockheed Air Express I found just what I wanted, a fine balance between these important factors, giving a maximum of efficiency and safety.

HIGH WING MONOPLANE

The Lockheed Air Express is a parasol type high-wing monoplane, with an open cockpit well toward the tail of the ship. It has a wing spread of 42 feet and is [illegible] feet in length [illegible] 3,057 pounds empty. The [illegible] tanks, with a total capacity of [illegible] gallons, are forward of the cockpit, seven in the fuselage and [illegible] in the wings. The location of the gas tanks in relation to the cockpit obviates the danger of the pilot's sitting between gas tanks and motor, a position which is precarious [illegible].

I have found [illegible] less quickly [illegible] than in a [illegible] of stultifying [illegible] moved [illegible] from an open cockpit [illegible] weather I [illegible] can and [illegible] shelter of a [illegible].

The Pratt and Whitney [illegible] motor has a [illegible] performance [illegible] routine of [illegible] and in [illegible] flights. The [illegible] horsepower [illegible] speed of 190 [illegible] cruising speed [illegible] an hour. With [illegible] the take-off [illegible] will be about [illegible] This will be [illegible] sumption [illegible].

ALTITUDE RANGE

The motor is equipped with a super-charger [illegible] which increases the horsepower to 450 at altitude [illegible] feet. My normal altitude during the trans-Atlantic flight will range between 2,000 and 8,000 feet, depending on weather conditions. Above 10,000 feet the air is noticeably thinner and more conducive to fatigue.

From the standpoint of transoceanic flying the most important advance in the [illegible] is in new instruments [illegible] those designed to reduce the hazards incident to blind flying and anyone who plans to fly the North Atlantic must [illegible] figure on doing a certain amount of blind flying. Blind flying means just what the words imply [illegible] without visibility, keeping the plane in proper [illegible] at a uniform altitude [illegible] course solely by instruments. Blind flying for [illegible] length of time is the supreme test of the pilot. It is apt to become a bit eerie, and it is generally agreed that many of the unsuccessful trans-Atlantic flights came to their unfortunate conclusion during periods of blind flying.

ARTIFICIAL HORIZON

The newest instrument which has been devised to reduce the hazard of blind flying is the Sperry artificial horizon. When the pilot cannot see the horizon this instrument indicates accurately the position of the plane in relation to the horizon. Other instruments necessary during such flying are the turn-and-bank indicator, altimeter, rate-of-climb indicator, tachometer and air-speed indicator.

Other instruments on the dash board keep check on the motor. The thermo-couple is a new device which gives the head and base temperatures of the cylinders. There is also the oil-pressure indicator and oil-temperature indicator. Another instrument indicates the pressure at which fuel is being pumped to the carburetor by the engine-driven Adco pump. The wing tanks of course have a gravity flow, although the Adco pump is generally in use at all times.

There is also an air [illegible] indicator which shows the temperature of the atmosphere through which I am passing and warns me when ice is forming on the wings. For the measurement of time there will be a clock on my instrument board, a watch on my wrist and possibly one strapped around my knee.

WON'T USE SEXTANT

I will not use a sextant, relying on dead reckoning instead of celestial navigation. It is difficult to read a sextant in a plane due to the motion, and virtually impossible when flying solo. Neither will I carry a radio [illegible] on account of the weight.

There will however be three compasses, the telepoint, aperiodic, and magnetic to guide me. The telepoint compass is the most recent development of the Pioneer Instrument Company and is in effect a refinement of the earth-inductor compass. The Ritchie aperiodic compass is an English development and is re-on my propeller diameter and pitch together with thorough examination and testing of all instruments and periods of blind flying, night flying and bad weather flying.

LOAD TESTS

The load tests [illegible] that is we start with [illegible] and gradually work up to three quarters of the full load of 651 gallons. The gasoline consumption tests are most important and must be absolutely accurate. Flights of an hour's duration are made at various altitudes and at different r.p.m.'s to determine the most economical speed. When this is determined the fuel consumption at the various r.p.m.'s with a margin of safety is [illegible].

The propeller tests are to determine at which pitch the prop is most efficient. We have changed the propeller [illegible] a [illegible] prop for a [illegible] prop and [illegible] the pitch from 20.2 degrees to 18 degrees.

When all these tests are completed I will know what [illegible] be expected of my plane under [illegible] and [illegible] I [illegible] can prepare [illegible].

OFFICER HELD DRUNK IN CRASH

Patrolman William Flaherty of the Squirrel Hill Station was, according to records of the Center Avenue Station, asleep and drunk in his auto, parked in Webster avenue yesterday.

The brakes on the machine, police said, apparently loosened and it started down Herron avenue.

Eye-witnesses, police said, told them it careened dangerously close to several children playing in the street. A block and a half away Flaherty awakened and attempted to stop the car.

It was too late. His machine crashed into one owned by August Schoppman, of 767 Acaremic street. Both cars were badly damaged.

Flaherty, who lives at 800 Bryn Mawr road, was taken to the Center Avenue Station and booked as drunk.

Sunday School Teacher Robbed By Own Pupils

A. M. Hendricks [illegible] Sunday School teacher, appeared against two members of his Robinson Street Mission [illegible] in Morals Court [illegible].

The boys [illegible] 16, of 820 Reedsdale [illegible] Walter Harman, 14, of [illegible] Reedsdale street, were held [illegible] court on charges of breaking and entering and larceny. Police say they found Grossgood in Hendricks' store and Harman [illegible] to have been the lookout [illegible] tested at his home a short time [illegible].

The boys obtained [illegible] according to police. Hendricks told Magistrate Thomas D. Jones he did not want to prosecute them because they were members of his Sunday School class.

25 SILVER CUPS TO BE AWARDED AS BABY PRIZES

150,000 Free Tickets for Those Attending Kroger-Sun-Telegraph Attraction.

Aside from the $3,000 worth of groceries that will be given away at the annual Kroger Stores' picnic in Kennywood Park next Tuesday, the crowd will use approximately 150,000 free tickets for the rides and entertainment devices that these stores have distributed to patrons throughout Pittsburgh and suburbs. Twenty-five silver cups and 100 gold medals will be awarded the winners in the Sun-Telegraph baby beauty contest. Kroger Stores will close at 1 p. m. the day of the picnic.

It is expected that the affair will draw 75,000 merry makers.

The outstanding event of the day will be the Sun-Telegraph-Kroger Stores baby beauty contest. There are approximately 2,000 children entered in this interesting event, and on account of the large number of children to be judged the contest will start promptly at 1 o'clock. The judging will take place at the bandstand, all of the seats in the grove in front of the stand being reserved for the mothers and their babies.

SEATS ALLOTTED

There will be a section of seats allotted to each class and clearly designated by banners naming the class they are reserved for. There will be added shelter tents for the use of the children and nurses provided for first aid if necessary. The most important thing to bear in mind is the fact that the judging will start promptly at 1 o'clock.

Everyone entering the park will be given a numbered badge. Any person finding a Kroger banner bearing a number corresponding to that on his badge will be entitled to a basket of groceries. There will be almost 500 winning numbers for groceries valued at $3,000.

BEAUTY PRIZE

At the grand ball to be conducted in the evening at the Kennywood dance pavilion the Kroger personality and beauty girl to be known as the "Kroger Girl" will be selected. A prize of $50.00 is being offered. No registration or dress requirements. Prominent men of Pittsburgh will act as judges. A prize waltz at 10:30 p. m. will end the program.

Tampa, the magician, is featured as one of the attractions in the evening.

William L. Burke, Pittsburgh branch sales manager, is general chairman and will be assisted by the branches executive committee headed by D. S. Farley, branch manager, and his staff, including L. J. Doyle, H. J. Gerver, L. G. Kyte, L. C. Simmons, W. T. Byrns, R. L. Symons, H. C. Eichley, J. J. Dean, J. H. Ross and Robert Gibson.

COMPETING FOR PRIZES

Babies Entered in Beauty Contest

LITTLE BLONDE—Miss Cynthia Anne Halley, 3, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph W. Halley, 813 Wood street, Wilkinsburg, entered among many others for the annual Sun-Telegraph Kroger stores' baby beauty contest on Tuesday.

ARDARA—Alma Marie Schroeder, 4, daughter of Mrs. Alma Schroeder, Ardara, Pa., another entrant.

BROOKLINE—Mildred Mae Crow, 3, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Crow, Brookline, to compete.

14 WILL ENTER GUILTY PLEAS

Seven jail prisoners all indicted at the special sitting of the Allegheny County grand jury last Thursday, have announced their intention of pleading guilty in Criminal Court Monday so that they may begin serving their sentences at once, instead of having to wait until jury trials are resumed in September.

Seven other prisoners arrested within the last few days are going to waive indictment and plead guilty on informations so that they too may begin their sentences. All 14 cases are for minor offenses, assault and battery, larceny and morals charges.

District Attorney Andrew T. Park is having a canvass taken today to canvass the other prisoners who were indicted last week in an effort to determine if others wish to enter pleas. It is expected that several will be added to the list.

Six prisoners were released from jail when the grand jury returned ignored bills, while 61 prisoners involving 122 indictments were left in jail.

Judges James H. Gray and S. J. Snee will sit Monday and Thursday to hear pleas of those who do not want to wait for jury trials.

BURIAL RITES SET FOR PRIEST

The body of the Rev. J. A. Pryor, pastor of St. Catherine's Church, Leechburg, who died Friday, will lie in state in the church tomorrow. He will be buried Tuesday morning with a solemn high mass.

Father Pryor was born in Wayne County and was educated at Holy Cross, Worcester, Mass., and St. Bernard's Seminary, Rochester, N. Y. Before going to Leechburg he had been attached to parishes at Syracuse, N. Y., Wilmerding, the Epiphany, Washington street, St. John's the Baptist, Liberty avenue, St. Pius, McKeesport, St. Leonard's, Monessen, and St. John the Evangelist, South Side.

He leaves a sister, Mary, and a brother, John Pryor, both of North Adams, Mass.

BIDS ON METERS TO BE OPENED

New bids on nearly 6,000 water meters for consumers throughout the city will be opened in Council Chamber tomorrow by Col. W. R. Dunlap, director of the city department of supplies.

At the same time Dunlap will open bids for thousands of repair parts for meters already in service.

The water meter contract was re-advertised several weeks ago following a ruling from the state Supreme Court that the previous contract, let to other than the lowest bidder, was invalid. Suit to contest the contract awarded by Col. Bertram L. Succop, deposed supply department director, was brought by the Neptune Water Meter Company. The Neptune company, not lowest bidder, was refused the contract.

The Supreme Court ruling showed that the contract was not given to the lowest responsible bidder as required by law.

Dunlap said 960 of the meters will be used by the city and 5,000 will be used by private consumers.

Wales Praised as Nurse By Actress Hurt in Crash

LONDON, Aug. 1.—(AP)—Miss Beryl Riggs, young actress who was injured when her car was in collision Thursday with one driven by the Prince of Wales, drove today from the hospital at Windsor to London to resume rehearsals. With the actress in the car was a large and beautiful bouquet sent by the Prince.

She had a small bandage on her head and drove the car herself all the way. She said:

"It was the only way I could be sure I had recovered my nerve."

Miss Riggs was full of praise for the efficiency of the Prince in attending the injuries of herself, her sister and her cousin after the accident and in making arrangements for sending them to the hospital. He also arranged for sending their damaged car to a repair shop, she said.

Coincidentally, the actress who plays the part of a stenographer in "The Love Game," is rehearsing at the Prince of Wales Theater.

At the hospital also the girl testified to the competence of the Prince in administering first aid. She said:

"I saw the Prince carrying my sister, who had fainted, into the clubhouse of the golf club where the collision occurred. Her face was covered with blood.

"The next thing I remember was the Prince bathing my forehead, and so competently, too. He stayed bathing our wounds and talking to us for an hour until we were brought to the hospital."

COOLIDGE PLAN FOR 1932 RACE HELD MYSTERY

Former White House Doctor Denies Story Declaring Ex-President Would Run.

MINNEAPOLIS, Aug. 1 (INS)—[illegible] the former President has not decided whether Coolidge will be a candidate for President in 1932, a former White House physician declared today.

Dr. Joel T. Boone, physician to Presidents Coolidge and Hoover, declared that Mr. Coolidge's statement of a preference for retirement was his own personal view.

The statement by Dr. Boone, who is a close friend of the Coolidges, was issued here after he had conferred with Colonel John C. Coolidge, father of the former President, who is visiting relatives in Minneapolis.

CITES DISAPPOINTMENT

Dr. Coolidge said:

"I did not discuss the possibilities of Mr. Coolidge's candidacy in 1932. No one knows, not even Mr. Coolidge himself, perhaps, whether he will be available. I would not go so far as to say he wouldn't accept the nomination under any consideration, but neither would I venture even a guess that he will run."

Dr. Coolidge left Minneapolis for a vacation trip to Pequot, Minn., where Colonel Coolidge and Thomas Dale, Minneapolis banker, have been guests of Frank A. Ross, who was a year ahead of President Coolidge in college.

"What I did say was that Mr. Coolidge was misunderstood when he said in 1927 that he would not choose to run. He was deeply disappointed but having been misunderstood he felt there might be a stronger man in the field and he didn't want to stand in the way.

"What he meant was that he did not choose himself to become a candidate but would run for a third term if the people insisted."

EDISON ILLNESS NOW ALARMING

ried by an automobile and taken to the Edison estate.

Since his return from Florida Mr. Edison has not been at his laboratories.

Members of the Edison family included Mr. and Mrs. Charles Edison and Mr. and Mrs. John Eyre Sloane, daughter and son-in-law of the electrical genius, were at the house awaiting a report from the physicians.

DENIAL BY SLOANE

Sloane was asked concerning a statement he issued earlier in the day when he said that his health today was improved and would take an automobile ride through the Orange Mountains. He said:

"Mr. Edison was about to take an automobile ride when he became suddenly unwell and it was decided to call the doctor."

He denied, however, that Mr. Edison's illness was critical.

Sloane was asked if the call for Dr. Howe had been urgent. He replied:

"It all depends on what you call urgent. On Saturday afternoon it would take four or five hours to get here from Long Island, unless an airplane was used."

C. F. Williams, a vice president of the Edison Company, who is at the estate, informed International News Service that he could make no statement now concerning Mr. Edison.

CONDITION CRITICAL

Charles Edison told intimate associates his father was critically ill. While the inventor seemed to rest better last night than for several days past, his son said there had been no decided improvement in his condition.

On returning from Florida in June the inventor appeared more feeble than usual. He visited his laboratory for a time but 10 days ago he stopped making these daily trips which have been so large a part of his active life.

N. Y. PUSHES WAR ON GANGS

a [illegible] Tuesday [illegible] tush!

The white casket, covered with flowers, was carried through more than a mile of crowded streets by 40 boys dressed in white. Leading the procession marched a band carrying a black and white mourning banner.

Directly behind him came Samuel De Vito, one of the wounded children, limping just ahead of the casket. People patted him on the head as he went by.

Crowds lined the streets as the cortege passed. Some of the women on the sidewalks were in tears. There was some muttering of imprecations but for the most part the crowd was silent.

MOTHER HYSTERICAL

Mrs. Vengalli, a heavy figure in a blue polkadot dress, was on the verge of collapse. She had to be carried screaming and struggling from the doorway of her home to an automobile. Several men had to hold her while she went through the ritual of lamentation. Vengalli, the father, added his cries to those of his wife.

The boys' mothers were with their sons, but [illegible] remained [illegible] Salvatore, also a victim of the bullets, was still in a hospital.

Tonight the strictest police [illegible] were maintained throughout Harlem's Little Italy. It was almost as if martial law had been declared. Many mothers, fearful of a repetition of the shooting, kept their children off the streets.

The bold attitude of the gunmen was accepted as a challenge to the entire police department. Rewards totaling $10,000 have been offered men by newspapers for the capture of the gunmen who took part in Tuesday night's shooting.

The victim of the subsequent shooting in the district, Adolph "Dopey" Gazzola, maintained silence throughout the day. The other man shot on the occasion, Frank Cristofoni, adhered to his story that he was a truck driver that he had no part in the fray.

National Committee Article Scores President's Critics For 'Demanding Miracles.'

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1 (INS).—The Republican National Committee came to the defense of President Hoover today in an article headed "Leader or Mexican Man?"

In the weekly letter which it sends to newspapers all over the country, the committee asserts that President Hoover never claimed to be a worker of wonders, produces eggs from silk handkerchiefs, or pours water from empty buckets. Instead it contends, all that can be claimed for the President was that he is a great leader.

ANSWERS CRITICS

The article was obviously intended as an answer to the President's critics, including those in his own party. It said:

"In the face of the record of the past two and one half years no fair-minded man can deny that President Hoover possesses and has exercised leadership of the highest type, leadership worthy of the exalted office he holds and of the great nation of which he is the chief executive.

"Those who criticize the President, therefore, holding him responsible for depression, for unemployment, for the price of wheat, are really not impeaching him so much as they are stultifying themselves.

"It is not a leader they are asking for. It is a medicine man, a snake doctor, a magician. They demand of the President he be a miracle worker, that he stretch forth a wand and suddenly make everybody in America rich and happy, while everybody in the rest of the world is poor and miserable; that he maintain the price of wheat in America at twice the figure it sells for in any other market, that he give everybody employment whether there is anything for them to do or not.

NOT WONDERS WORKER

"President Hoover, again and again, in national and international affairs, has proven himself a leader. He has never claimed to be a worker of wonders. He does not pull rabbits out of plug hats, or produce eggs from silk handkerchiefs, or pour water out of empty buckets.

"It is time for common sense to assert itself. Let us leave off demanding impossibilities of our President. Let us see him for what he is, a wise leader, giving himself without stint and with absolute patriotic devotion to the hardest tasks that confront any American. Let us cease quarreling with him because he is not omniscient and omnipotent, and follow him because he is our leader."

brain after promulgating his law. Previous to that shooting, two Vera Cruz priests had been murdered in church.

GOVERNOR TEJEDA asserts that the attempt to murder him was instigated by high Catholic authorities, similar to the act of Jose Toral, Catholic fanatic who, acting under the instructions of Catholic authorities, murdered President-elect Alvaro Obregon.

Tejeda adds the difference is that "they killed him, but I escaped."

GOV. TEJEDA complains that the lower classes of Vera Cruz were so much imbued by fanatical demons that they were a menace to the state's welfare and progress. Further he accuses the Catholic church of seeking money to build new, unnecessary churches, and of sending, during many years, thirty million pesos, about fifteen million dollars yearly, to the Vatican, now virtually a sovereign state, without authority to interfere in Mexico or to take funds out of the country.

Gov. Tejeda seems to have borrowed his sovereign foreign state idea from Mussolini's controversy with the Pope.

It would be interesting to know where the Mexican peasants could get $15,000,000 to send away each year, considering that Mexico is unable to pay interest on its foreign debt.

COUNCIL TO ACT ON INQUIRY INTO GARBAGE FIRM

Resolution Calling for Quiz Likely to Come Up for Vote Tomorrow.

City Council is expected tomorrow to act on a resolution directing a formal inquiry into the capitalization and personnel of the Modern Service Company, low bidder on the city's 1932 rubbish and garbage removal contract.

The probe was asked last week by Attorney Earl Reed, counsel for Francis Guthrie, a taxpayer, who charged in a letter to Council that he had certain information he wished to impart concerning the Modern Service Company's affairs.

Guthrie and Reed were given a hearing but when witnesses for the Modern Service Company refused to answer questions, Reed asked that Council go into a formal probe. A formal probe, he pointed out, permits Council to issue subpenas for witnesses.

Meanwhile Dr. Charles B. Mantz, city health director, was still studying the bids submitted both by the Modern Service Company and the American Reduction Company. The Modern Company's bid was $1,000,000 less than its competitor for a three-year contract.

Drivers of sixes never want less because it takes six cylinders to give the smooth, silent power that makes driving really enjoyable

Ask some of your friends who own sixes if they would ever consider driving a car with fewer cylinders again. Their answers will give you a good idea of why sixes are so popular today.

Drivers of sixes are spoiled for anything less. Drivers of sixes are "sold" on multiple cylinders. They would no more think of giving up "six" performance than they would consider giving up any of the other real advancements of motoring. To them, the whole cylinder question has been settled, once and for all.

Slip behind the wheel of a Chevrolet Six, and you'll know why these drivers feel as they do. Get the inside facts about "six" performance through first-hand test, in your own special way.

Step on the starter, let the motor idle—and notice how serenely, silently it runs. Throw in the clutch, shift into "low"—and feel that steady, unruffled flow of power. Change into "second," hit a faster and faster clip, slip the lever into "high," sweep along at top speed—then throttle down to barely a crawl. The smoothness and flexibility you always get are six-cylinder smoothness, six-cylinder flexibility. Gone are annoying tremors and vibration. Every driving moment is enjoyable!

Then, before you leave the six-cylinder Chevrolet, raise the hood while the engine is running—take a look at the source of its performance. The smooth steady operation of six cylinders means dependability through the months and the miles. Wearing vibration is reduced to a minimum. The whole car stays young longer as a result. There is less need for repairs.

Over two million owners have proved the value of Chevrolet's six-cylinder design. They have found that Chevrolet actually costs less for gas, less for oil, and less for upkeep than any other automobile. They have found it smoother, quieter, more enjoyable in operation! They know a six is better—and they would never be satisfied with less!

TENNIS QUEEN ANNEXES FINAL AT SEABRIGHT

Former Helen Wills Gives California Rival Lesson in One-Sided Court Battle.

SEABRIGHT, N. J., Aug. 1.—(AP.)—Mrs. Helen Wills Moody, playing her second tournament of the year, required just 12 games and 32 minutes today to prove she has no serious rivals in the United States as a tennis player.

In that length of time she defeated Helen Jacobs, her California neighbor, in the final of the Seabright invitation tournament 6-0, 6-0. Mrs. Moody thereby gained permanent possession of the bowl which Miss Jacobs was attempting to put out of reach. ...

Coast as artistic a trimming as the latter ever has experienced in a major tournament.

Staying on her base line most of the time Mrs. Moody chased Miss Jacobs from one corner of Seabright's center court to the other, driving back at the latter with stunning speed the soft shots Miss Jacobs attempted to use to break up Queen Helen's game.

MISS JACOBS TIRES

Advancing to the net only at rare intervals and then to no particular effect, Mrs. Moody merely ran her rival until she was arm and leg weary and let Miss Jacobs defeat herself. The latter had

ACTION—Here's an unusual picture, showing both the starting and finishing ends of a double play. The Pirates executed it against the Reds at Forbes Field yesterday. With Cuccinello on first and one out in the second inning, Beck hit to Grosklos, who threw to Thevenow, who touched second and then stepped off the bag to throw to Grantham at first base, as diagramed. PARKS TENNIS KINGS DECIDED History was repeated in the second annual Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph Pittsburgh public parks tennis championships yesterday when Mrs. Jean Artzberger and Frank Broida emerged victorious in final round battles at their respective parks and qualified to participate in the inter-parks milling which will get under way on the Frick Park courts on Wednesday.

In the inaugural tournament last year Mrs. Artzberger annexed the women's singles title and Broida won the men's singles crown.

Winners in the competitions at the various parks concluded yesterday are to be opposed in the inter-parks battling. The inter-parks events winners will be recognized as Pittsburgh public parks men's and women's champions and will be sent by the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph to represent this city in the national public parks championships to be staged in Detroit late this month.

BROIDA BEATS ELLIOTT

Broida, competing at Frick Park, defeated Paul Elliott, 6-1, 7-5, 6-0, in surviving the final round there. The defending champ started and finished impressively, but Elliott put up a stern fight in the second set.

Mrs. Artzberger, Olympia Park entrant, vanquished Mrs. Caroline Kurtz 6-0, 6-2, in again proving her right to rule as queen of

Former Baseball Official in Senate

MARTINSBURG, W. Va., Aug. 1.—Announcement was made here today of the appointment by Gov. William G. Conley of Lewis H. Thompson, former vice president of the Blue Ridge League, as a member of the State Senate from the Fifteenth Senatorial District, succeeding Harry P. Henshaw, who, after serving 11 years in the upper branch of the Legislature, resigned several weeks ago to become a member of the State Road Commission.

Thompson is one of the best-known minor league baseball men in the country today. In addition to being vice president of the Blue Ridge loop during its many years of operation, he also headed the Martinsburg club. He is a close personal friend of Connie Mack, leader of the famed Philadelphia Athletics, and handled the business affairs of the Martinsburg club during the long period the A's used Martinsburg as a farm.

Pirates Farm Hal Finney to Hazelton Club

Hal Finney, the third-string catcher of the Pittsburgh club throughout the present season, last night was farmed out under a special 24-hour option to Hazleton of the New York-Pennsylvania League.

The youthful receiver is loaded with promise, but there was not much chance for him to get past Eddie Phillips and Earl Grace who have been doing valiant work for the Buccos.

Finney, who came to the Buccos after minor-league experience in the South, is highly regarded by Manager Ens. Hal has so much energy he was hardly satisfied to sit on the bench so the local officials arranged a deal whereby he could get some work. The departure of the youth leaves the Buccos with only two receivers, but Hal can be recalled in a day if needed.

THREE O-O-O'S IN A ROW

Larry French — Ray Kremer — Glenn Spencer

PITCHING!—No club in the major leagues is getting such fine pitching as the Pirates these days. They have won their last three games by the shutout route, French blanking the Giants on four hits, Kremer letting down the Reds with six and Spencer yesterday allowing the Reds only three safeties.

By CHARLES J. DOYLE

Glenn Spencer's amazing fast ball was potent yesterday and the Pirates won their third straight shutout victory as they made it two in a row over the Reds. A ball lost in the blazing sun of the left field gave Pie Traynor a triple in the seventh and a moment later Paul Waner drove his captain over with a hit that decided the game. The resultant 1 to 0 triumph for the Buccos saw Eppa Rixey go down to a defeat he did not merit.

Spencer, one of the smartest pitchers of the league, had an old-fashioned ... and ... speed on display as he held the Cincinnati ... to three hits. Glenn's smoke was in almost perfect control throughout the battle. He walked but one batter.

THIRD STRAIGHT BLANK

Spencer's goose egg party followed in the wake of shutout triumphs recorded by Remy Kremer and Larry French. Kremer blanked the Reds on the previous afternoon, while Larry shut the door in the face of the Giants on Thursday.

The effective pitching of the Pirate staff has kept the enemy away from the home plate for 31 innings, no rival runner reaching the goal since the fifth round of Wednesday's game with the Giants.

The fans had a sentimental ... for Eppa Rixey, the immediate victim of the Pirate ... Rixey has ... with more frequency than the Pirate ... but Eppa gave a sparkling performance and there is no telling what the result would have been had the Traynor drive been caught.

The Pirate leader poled off the seventh with a long fly to left center. Rixey had his defense set perfectly for the smash. Pie hits a lot of extra-base blows into the left-center pocket and Rixey

U. S. Entrant Wins German Marathon

BERLIN, Aug. 1 (AP)—German athletes today began their two-day battle for track and field championship honors, but the chief prize went to a man—American—who captured the 26-mile Olympic Marathon as a preliminary event for the Berlin Olympic Games of 1932.

The huge crowd of the Berlin stadium leaped to its feet with a wild cheer as Dobson shuffled home first by a decisive margin, beating his nearest rival, Geisler of Charlottenburg, by nearly a kilometer, about two-thirds of a mile. The winner covered the full marathon route of 42.2 kilometers (26 miles 385 yards) in the good time of 2 hours 47 minutes 19.2 seconds.

Barrier System For Butler Races

BUTLER, Pa., Aug. 1. The barrier starting system similar to that used in county fair races, will be used at the Butler Fair and Exposition harness horse races, August 19 to 22, it was announced by the Special Committee of the Fair today.

Arrangements are being made to install the system next week and instructions are expected to try out the new method of starting. The barrier system is being inaugurated here as a step to prevent scoring and to speed up the races. Authorities believe that they can run off their programs in an hour and a half less time than heretofore.

"Multum pro Parvo" is still De Soto's slogan—and more than ever a fact

"Multum pro Parvo"—much for little—was the slogan of the De Soto Six when it made its appearance and established an all-time sales record for a first-year car.

In 1929 this car was listed at a base price of $845. It was a fine value at that figure. Today's De Soto Six Sedan has a base price of $695, or $150 less than its fore-runner of less than three years ago.

But that is only half the story. Today's De Soto is a much better car in every respect, as a comparison of some of the principal specifications will reveal.

The 1931 De Soto has a larger engine (205 cubic inches piston displacement against 174.9). It has 72 horsepower against 55. It is capable of a top speed of 75 miles an hour as against 65. It has better acceleration. It has the new and advanced Easy-Shift Transmission. It has an all-steel body as against a composite. It has a double-drop frame permitting an extremely low center of gravity as against a straight frame. It has a fuel pump as against a vacuum feed system. It has handsomer upholstery and fittings and a wider choice of colors.

And at a very slight added cost it offers Free Wheeling, one of the most important engineering advancements of recent years.

IF YOU WANT TO KNOW WHAT REAL SMOOTHNESS IS ..

DRIVE an OLDSMOBILE

There could hardly be a question in your mind as to whether or not smoothness is a quality you want in the next car you buy. But there is very apt to be a question as to what is meant by "smoothness"—and just how smooth the modern automobile can be.

Removal of all doubt is a simple matter. Take a ride in Oldsmobile and compare the smoothness of this increasingly popular car with that to which you are accustomed. Drive at idling speed. Push on up to your usual touring pace. Then step on the accelerator and see how smoothly and quietly you travel at top speed—if you care for fast going.

When you learn how really "luxurious" performance can be . . . how easy, effortless, and restful, there's more than a chance that you'll decide you have been missing something important in motoring enjoyment.

Thousands of motorists have swung to Oldsmobile this year because of its splendid all-round performance. And many of them have based their final decision on the car's inherent smoothness—a factor which is doubly important because it bears not only on your own motoring enjoyment but also on the life and service of the car itself.

★ Your Oldsmobile dealer will gladly place a car at your disposal so that you may test Oldsmobile's smoothness first-hand. In this way you can prove to yourself how much such Oldsmobile features as Synchro-Mesh Transmission, Quiet Second Gear and Down-Draft Carburetion mean to the smooth, quiet delivery of power. Above all, you will feel the inherent smoothness of the Oldsmobile engine throughout the entire speed range. Visit your dealer today.

Oldsmobile may be purchased on the convenient G.M.A.C. time payment plan. $845, the two-door sedan, spare tire and bumpers extra.

BURNING BLAZE VICTOR

The Post and Paddock Stakes for 2-year-olds, which shared in importance with the handicap, was won by an outsider in the ... Burning Blaze, owned by Richard and Patrick Nash of Chicago, whose racing colors are known as the Valley Lake Stable.

The race was marred by a disastrous accident when three horses fell as the field of 14 was swinging into the stretch. Tellico, owned by C. C. Van Meter, of Lexington, Ky., dropped as if shot when Polonaise, the entry of W. P. Coe of New York, cut him down from behind. Etcetera and At Sunrise, the entry of John J. Schott, fell over the prostrate Tellico. Bobby Jones, riding Tellico, and Jockey Fairbrother, on At Sunrise, and Jimmy McCoy, rider of Etcetera, were picked up unconscious but escaped with minor bruises.

Tellico, which suffered a severed tendon in the rear left leg, probably will be destroyed.

MORFAIR CLOSE SECOND

The victory of Burning Blaze resulted in the defeat of Morfair, sensational juvenile owned by Victor Emmanuel, of New York. Liberty Limited, one-half of the entry of W. T. Waggoner, of Arlington, Tex., was third, while fourth money went to Phantom Legion, owned by William Ziegler, Jr., of New York.

Burning Blaze, which was grouped in the field betting with Tick On, snatched victory from Morfair by a nose. The race was worth $39,400 to the Nash brothers. It was the richest stake ever run in the West for 2-year-olds. Burning Blaze ran the six furloughs in 1:11 4-5 in a drizzling rain.

Burning Blaze paid $13.46 to win, $6.38 to place and $3.98 to show. Morfair, the favorite, paid $4.58 to place and $3.78 to show. Liberty Limited paid $4.98 to show.

Mrs. Moody Easy Winner

33 outs in the 12 games and drove 13 balls into the net.

It was only in the first game and the last three that the match resembled a contest.

In the first game Mrs. Moody was merely warming up and was moving the corners with her long flat drives. In the last three Miss Jacobs, defeat staring her in the face, started to smash and drive with the speed and power of which she is capable and made Mrs. Moody hustle to win. Mrs. Moody did not let this closing flurry disturb her, however, and always had matters under control.

A capacity crowd of 3,000 persons filled the stands and stood along the side walls for the match, but they found little to cheer about. It was merely a teacher giving a pupil a tennis lesson.

The heat of the last few days, which caused Mrs. L. A. Harper of Oakland, Cal., to default her semi-final match to Miss Jacobs Thursday, was gone. The day was cool with a thin layer of clouds shutting off the sun to make for ideal conditions.

Mrs. Moody lost only nine games in her match to the title. Seven of these she lost Thursday in the semi-finals to Mrs. Marion Zinderstein Jessup, first winner of the Seabright woman's singles, in 1920.

Miss Jacobs was seeking her third Seabright title and permanent possession of the bowl, having won in 1928 and 1929.

The men's doubles title went to the old Davis Cup firm of John Van Ryn, Philadelphia, and Wilmer Allison, of Austin, Tex. They defeated Berkeley Bell, New York, and Gregory S. Mangin, Newark, conquerors of the national champions, John Doeg and George Lott, by scores of 7-5, 6-2, 6-4.

Van Ryn and his wife, the former Marjorie Gladman, won the mixed doubles from Ellsworth F. Vines, Jr., Pasadena, Cal., and Josephine Cruickshank, Santa Ana, Cal., in straight sets, 6-3, 6-4.

By VERN SWARTSLAGER

Although local golf interest will be centered in the national public links championship at the Keller course, St. Paul, this week, where on Tuesday Carl F. Kauffmann, three-times winner of the gonfalon, makes his fourth attempt to grab the honors, and the other members of the Pittsburgh team, Carl Linden, Harry Ransom and Fred Lally, join him in an effort to regain the Warren G. Harding Cup, emblematic of the National public links team championship, the linksmen from this district are playing a big part in the three tourneys scheduled at the Bedford Springs Golf Club, feature competitions on the golf calendar for the next seven days.

AMATEURS AT BEDFORD

Beginning today with a full field listed to compete in a pre-amateur event at the Bedford Springs course, which will be used tomorrow, when all golfers will participate in the invitation amateur tourney, a majority of the entrants from Pittsburgh and the Bedford Springs layout is expected to see a hot-bed for the ancient and honorable game this week.

And another resort course, the Summit Golf Club at Uniontown, will be the scene of a special match Saturday which has created no end of interest for the district amateurs are slated to be paired off with Gene Sarazen and Johnny Farrell, former national open champions, in an afternoon contest. Sarazen and Farrell will hook up with a pair of professionals for a nine-hole exhibition at 10 o'clock on the morning of the big event. The amateurs who will play with Farrell and Sarazen will not be definitely decided until the last of them take their qualifying test today, many having played yesterday.

Three women's tourneys are on the books for this week and it appears each should attract a representative field. The St. Clair Country Club will hold a mixed foursome on Wednesday and an invitation tourney will be staged on the same day at the Valley Heights Golf Club.

The Women's Golf Association of Western Pennsylvania is sponsoring a one-day event at the Butler Country Club Friday.

Tomorrow the Pittsburgh Kiwanis Club has a field day at the Wildwood Country Club.

FIGHTING FARMER STAR

Frankie Bojarski Jack Barry

PUNCHER—Frankie Bojarski, of McKean, Pa., a fighting farmer who has been undefeated in 41 battles, looms as a star in the lightweight class. He is a southpaw and a terrific puncher. FANCY STROKES OFTEN PROVE COSTLY

By BOBBY JONES

American Amateur Champion and Former United States and British Open and British Amateur Titleholder

It is not a very difficult matter to secure agreement of all golfers to the proposition that the game is hard enough without the player's going out of his way to add to his own troubles. The swing itself is a thing which needs all the simplifying which we can possibly give it, and yet it seems to me in playing an ordinary round of golf all of us, from the duffer right on up, give too little attention to selecting the easiest shot to play.

I have heard any number of experts offer the opinion that one of the great reasons for the failure of the British Ryder Cup team at Scioto was the decided preference shown by the visiting players for the curling shot to the hole. It certainly is true that our British friends are inclined to disdain the straight shot which flies or at least is intended to fly dead on the flag. Whether or not their constant playing on seaside courses in seaside gales has driven them to a different style, the fact is that they all like to fade or draw their iron shots and, not only this, but they like to vary the fade and the draw from hole to hole.

In my opinion this is just carrying the average golfer's failing a little bit farther. I think there might be some reason to say that the most difficult thing in golf is to hit a ball which flies perfectly straight without any bend in either direction, but still a man who attempts to play straight on the flag or on the center of the green gives himself a considerable margin, whereas to attempt an intentional fade or draw only makes the execution more difficult.

I do not profess to be an expert at playing in a heavy wind. I confess that the wind does bother me considerably on a seaside course, particularly when the ground is fast, but I have always found that for me at any rate the best method in the long run was to hit the ball straight off to either the left or the right and allow for the wind drift as a fleeman would. There may not be quite the full measure of satisfaction in bringing off a conservative shot like this rather than the more daring and more delicate stroke, but I do believe that the less ambitious policy will improve the figures on the score card which after all is the thing most desired.

I have seen this same thing come over my game in championship play in America where there was no wind to speak of. Two formidable opponents

Player Hurt In Polo Tilt

The Whites downed the Blues 4 to 2, yesterday afternoon at the Pittsburgh Polo Club field as Dave McCahill, Jr., No. 2 man for the Whites, narrowly escaped serious injury on two occasions.

Unbalanced following a shot near the Blues' goal in the opening minutes of the fourth chukker, McCahill was thrown and the pony passed over him as he flattened to the ground, protecting his head with his arms. Remounting his mount he continued in play only to receive a bad rush over the left eye from the mallet of an opposing player as both struck at the ball. He withdrew from action until the period was over.

Leading his White team with great skill, King McCreery, No. 1 man, accounted for two of the quartet's four markers. Vose Babcock took the first score of the match and was to be found prominently in every play.

George Van [illegible], captain of the Blues, made his team's first score, the result of a beautifully executed ride from far down the field, the shot going directly through the posts. Milholland made good a short one in the next chukker for the Blues. No fouls were called. The lineups:

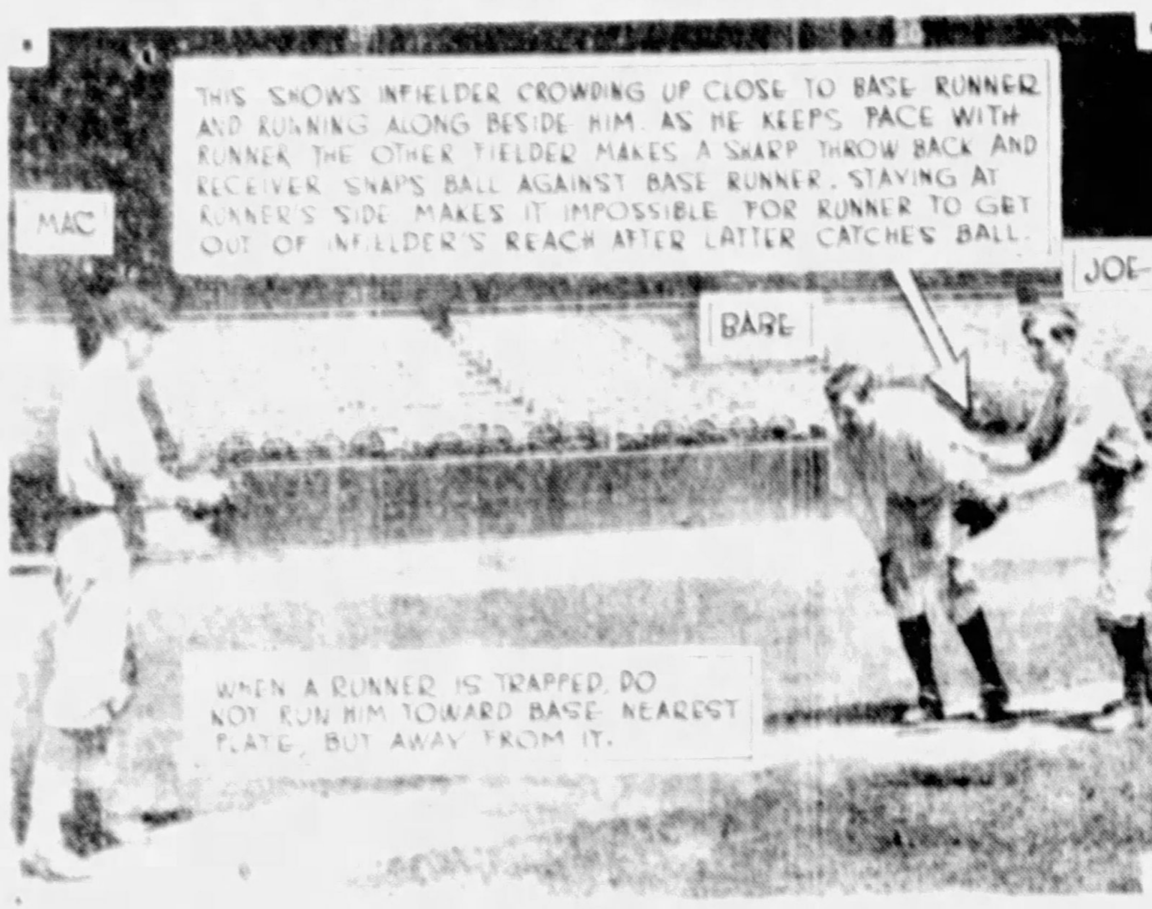
BASEBALL'S HIGHEST SALARIED PLAYER



RUNNING DOWN A RUNNER BETWEEN THE BASES

[illegible]

In the accompanying photograph you will see a method which permits no escape for the base runner when it is properly made. Joe Sewell of the Yankees is an expert on this play and it is pretty to see him work it. It is a change from the old style of remaining directly behind the runner and in line with the base all of the time until he is forced to run into you or is unable to turn and get out of the fielder's reach.

[illegible]

One of the dangers of this play is that the infielder may hold the ball so long that the runner finally can close in on a base, make his dash and get away with it. We'll say that a runner is strung up between third and second. Run him back toward second, and when he is about 15 or 20 feet from the bag, a throw to the player who is guarding the base should get him. If he should turn fast and get going again at least you have a grand chance to get him before he can get as far as third.

It always is the proper play to concentrate on the player nearer the plate if you have two runners between the bases. Take for instance the play when a runner moves off first base or slows down on an attempted steal to give a runner on third a chance to race to the plate. This is a play that causes infields a lot of trouble and very frequently results in a late throw home letting one man score and the other reach second.

In such a play the fellow between third and home is the one who should be halted. The proper play is for the man with the ball nearest first and second to get a look at the [illegible] runner's position before making a throw for the other fellow. If he has strayed off third for any distance, close in on him and throw to third or home as he makes his dash. A delay in making a throw often lets one of them escape. But the rule always to be remembered is that the team at bat is gambling for that one run because it means something and for that reason the team in the field should stop that run. Get that fellow from third base as soon as he gets into the danger zone.

Speed in closing in one baserunner sometimes results in getting two of them. Some big league infielders are great at holding back one play until the other runner has started for the next base. You know, it is one baserunner's play always to travel as far as he can while another is being run down. If the team in the field can get one runner just as another runner is halfway between bases a fast throw will result in a double play. But for boys I would say that it is better baseball to make sure of one, because, in trying to do too much, both runners may escape.

Don't forget these things. A player who gets into a trap never should be allowed to escape. Back up the players who are throwing the ball while the baserunner is hopping up and down the line between them. Do not run toward the base nearest the plate, but away from it. Make him pay for his mistake, as that run may be the run that will beat you.

France Likely To Compete in Olympic Games

PARIS, Aug. 1.—(AP)—France may participate in the 1932 Olympic Games at Los Angeles after all, officials of the Olympic committee and the ministry of the budget announced today.

The announcement reverses a recent decision of the Olympic committee saying France would not send a representative team to Los Angeles due to the lack of funds.

In a communication issued today, the ministry said:

"Thanks to the initiative of Emile Morinaud, under secretary for physical education, and the co-operation of the national sports committee, preparations for the 1932 games will not be interrupted and France's participation might be assured this summer."

PLAIN COLORS TO FEATURE GRID OUTFITS

By JESS CARVER

Ginger bread designs in football togs apparently are out as far as the local college varsities are concerned. The Dukes never have gone for novelties in jersey designs. Pitt is contemplating abolishing its gold and blue conglomeration and Tech after a season of flashy haberdashery is going back to solid colors.

The Tartans who wore plain crimson sweaters and hose for a long time were garbed in a red and white combination last year and didn't look so snappy either. But so many teams have come for the same design that Buddy Overend and Bob Waddell and Walt Steffen have decided to adorn the boys in crimson again with green as an alternate color.

Pitt, according to Don Harrison, is going to wear plain blue jerseys with good numbers at home and the reverse when on the road.

The Saints also will adopt a new design for their pants, said design having been worked out by Bob Waddell and Al Irwin and is somewhat on the order of the trousers worn by Notre Dame.

CONFOUNDING THE DEAN

A couple of years or so ago, Dean Geoffrey Atkinson, of Amherst, arose one morning, hopped down to his breakfast, found the toast burnt and immediately decided that four-letter athletes at Amherst, in the future, were "out." Four-letter men have nothing in common with burnt toast, get me right on that point, but the Dean's good nature was ruffled considerably by the burnt toast and accordingly he had to develop a peeve against something—or someone. You all know how it is.

So Dean Atkinson went before the board of trustees or the faculty committee on athletics, I forget which, and put in what, to the boys in the back room, is known as a "rap" against four-letter men.

The dean pointed out that it was impossible for a student to keep up in his classes and campus activities and compete in four branches of athletics. Something argued the dean had to suffer and as it is a well-known fact that athletics seldom come out second best in a tussle with books, Dean Atkinson endeavored to convince the savants that a ruling should be passed prohibiting students at Amherst from engaging in more than two branches of sport.

GOODBYE RULE

Just as a matter of record, it was decided to check on the scholastic elite of the institution and see how the grades compared with those of the athletically prominent.

At that time Amherst had one four-letter man. He was a young chap by name of Howard Groskloss.

When the check was made the scholastic leader of the senior class was the same Mr. Groskloss. The rule was very diplomatically tabled, and that night the Atkinson cook was warned that the next time the toast was fired so was she.

Many nice things have been written and said about Howdy Groskloss since he became the infield star of the Pirates, but the boys seem to have passed up this little yarn. I thank you very much, Mr. Doyle.

Time Out

LOCAL VISITORS—Mr. and Mrs. Robert (Pat) Reagan and Master Pat Reagan, Jr., of Villa Nova and Cannonsburg and formerly of South Bend and the middle of the Notre Dame line. Mr. Reagan is assistant grid coach at Villa Nova and Mrs. Reagan is head coach of Mr. Reagan. Will be in our midst for some time.

M. Giles Armentrout, Carnegie Tech's football captain, is behaving himself at Dick Victor's summer camp, has taken on some weight, tips the beam now at about 193 pounds and hopes to carry as much when he and the rest of the boys report to Bob Waddell and Judge Steffen August 31.

When informed that the Giants were contemplating signing Eddie Baker, Pitt's quarterback star of last fall, a New York baseball writer protested in this manner:

"My gracious, why sign another quarterback? We've got enough quarterbacks on this club now."

NEW YORK, Aug. 1 (INS)—Sir Ashley, bearing the same Belair Stud silks that flew over Gallant Fox last year, drove to a brilliant triumph in the fifteenth renewal of the Empire City Derby at Empire City this afternoon.

Danour earned the title to second place champion when he finished a short length back. It was his ninth straight second and it does seem that he is destined to race out his career in the place notch.

Blenheim, coupled in the entry with the winner, was third and Barometer fourth.

AUTOMOBILE NEWS

OVER-HEATING REMEDY GIVEN BY HUPMOBILE

Radiator Core, Fan and Belt Inspection First Steps When Engine Runs Hot.

DETROIT, Aug. 1.—The recent extremely hot days caused many overheated motor car engines. These hot weather difficulties, H. [illegible] Gleeson points out in a bulletin just released by Hupmobile's service bureau, really [illegible] the improved performance that can be had in winter operation if proper safeguards are taken care of, the bulletin says.

"These hot summer months show both the good and bad points of engine cooling as does no other time of year. While some owners complain of over-heating and blame the car for this trouble, they fail to notice certain significant details which might eliminate these difficulties. Most owners forget that their car is made to perform in all sorts of weather, heat, storm and cold, while the owners hesitate to exert themselves under similar circumstances.

INSPECT CORE

"Most automobiles of recent years have been designed to operate under normal temperatures without difficulty. Water pump capacities have been increased as has the capacity of the radiator. Radiator hose size is sufficient to allow an uninterrupted flow of the cooling medium. Even the crankcases of today's vehicles have been ribbed to assist in heat radiation.

"The first thing to look for in an overheated engine is a clogged radiator core. Dust, dirt, mud, bugs, flies and grasshoppers may quickly cause a stoppage of cool air through the radiator. Perhaps the fan belt is loose and thus does not permit full passage of air. Maybe the fan bearings need to be lubricated. Leaky radiator hose should be checked for breaks and replaced, while the hose may also become clogged by sludge from the water, thus obstructing the water flow. The radiator itself should be flushed regularly to remove the scum caused by chemicals within the water which may clog the vertical pipes in the core.

CHECK BELT, FAN

"One feature, which may be related to overheating, is seldom thought of by the owner. This is the inter-relation of temperatures of both oil and water. If the water boils, imperfect radiation of heat results. This causes the engine lubricant to run hot. By the same token, scarcity of oil or a lubricant of inferior grade will quickly heat and this abnormal temperature is then transmitted to the water in the cooling system.

"Should the heat indicator register in the danger area, the driver should first check the fan. If the fan and belt are in good condition and operating satisfactorily, the radiator core should be checked and the clogging material removed. If the engine still runs hot, check for air leaks in the water pump or hose connections, and also make sure that you have a sufficient supply of oil. If these factors seem to be all right, drain and flush the radiator and examine the radiator hose for poor circulation.

"These precautions should normally be taken at the end of each summer's driving to insure trouble-free operation during the cooler months. They should also be duplicated after the winter months to provide better operation during the hot season."

Chevrolet Opens Bumper Factory

Operations were started recently in the new bumper manufacturing plant of the Chevrolet Motor Company in Detroit. Construction of the new plant, which has a floor space of 35,000 square feet, was started early this spring and completed last month. Included in the mechanical installations are several innovations designed to facilitate the handling and fabrication of material.

Construction of the bumper plant brings the total number of Chevrolet domestic factories to 21 and enables the company to exercise further supervision over materials, workmanship and design of the features in the current line of sixes.

ECONOMY TEST TROPHY TAKEN BY CHEVROLET

Stock Coupe Operated by Woman Makes 27.18 Miles On Gallon of Gasoline.

SEATTLE, Wash., Aug. 1.—Another record in the long list of victories hung up for six-cylinder car economy was added here when Mrs. W. B. Robertson drove her new Chevrolet six coupe to an official AAA performance of 27.18 miles per gallon in the 212-mile Lake Crescent [illegible] run from this city.

The record brought her the Gilmore Lion Head sweepstakes trophy, symbolic of the champion economy driver of the Pacific Northwest, in a run entered by 42 women at the wheels of 42 stock cars sponsored by the Gilmore Oil Company.

In bettering a field of 21 different makes of cars, Mrs. Robertson's Chevrolet rolled up 41.38 points, the scoring being based on ton miles arrived at by multiplying the distance traveled by the weight of the car in tons and dividing this by the gallons of gas consumed. Penalties of 10 points for each pint of oil and two points for each pint of water consumed were levied. Mrs. Robertson's car was officially credited with using no additional oil or water.

The run was staged by the contest board of the American Automobile Association. Cars were officially checked for strictly stock equipment and official observers rode with the women drivers.

Mrs. Robertson in winning the general sweepstakes prize, of course finished first in her class. Of 10 cars entered in this class four were Chevrolets, and finished respectively first, second, third and fifth, the official records show.

FIRM ASSUMES BIG TIRE QUOTA

Experience has demonstrated that the tire industry is always one of the first to swing back after the peak of an industrial and economic depression has been passed.

In line with the assertion of William O'Neil, president of the General Tire and Rubber Company, that the tire industry can not wait for general business to effect a complete recovery, Campbell [illegible] General Tires in this city, has assumed a [illegible] quota for the last half of 1931 that is 18 per cent greater than last year's volume in the same period.

"We know that motorists need tires badly and that most of them want the best tires—those that have been proved safe and durable," says "Jim" Campbell today.

"The General factory at Akron has been doing its part towards keeping its workers employed and keeping production on an even keel throughout the depression without reducing wages."

GRAHAM PICKED ON DESERT JOB

A Graham special eight has won the distinction of being chosen by the engineers of the Six Companies, Inc., for exacting and arduous work in the extremely hot desert country surrounding Las Vegas, N. M., where the company will build the Hoover Dam on the Colorado River, states a bulletin just received by F. A. Carpenter, Graham distributor here.

The $49,000,000 contract recently awarded by the Six Companies covers the largest private construction job in all history.

R. J. Laaler, chairman of the construction committee who made the purchase, was guided by three features of Graham construction not to be found in any other single make of car. They are the complete equipment of safety plate glass, the Graham synchronized four-speed transmission, and the cooling system, the latter of special importance in the broiling desert region where the Graham must work.

AUBURN USING PLANE TO SAVE TIME OF CHIEFS

Acquires Tri-Motored Ship To Establish Contacts With Office, Factories.

AUBURN, Ind., Aug. 1.—Use of an airplane by company officials to reduce travel time and cut costs has been adopted by the Auburn Automobile Company with the purchase of a [illegible] club model, J. A. [illegible], president and general manager of the Pittsburgh Auburn Company, announced.

The plane [illegible] capacity of eight passengers [illegible] pilot will be used to Auburn officials between the company's plants in the Muncie [illegible] contact dealers and distributors over the entire United States.

FLIES 14,000 MILES

In a similar plane recently E. McDarby, vice president in charge of sales, traveled a total of 14,000 miles, visiting 24 distributors and 16 dealers in [illegible] days, whereas the same trip in past years consumed more than 90 days.

"The use of the airplane is merely an additional step in modernizing a business," R. H. Faulkner, president of the Auburn Company, said today. "For instance, it is approximately 125 miles from Auburn, Ind., to Connersville, Ind., where one of our plants is located. Our executives, engineers and production men are constantly going between these two cities. By train the travel time is seven hours and by automobile three and a half hours. Plane time is slightly over one hour.

TIME SAVER

"Our executives can now leave Auburn at 9 a. m. and be in the Connersville plant by 10:30 a. m. and by leaving Connersville at 4:30 p. m. be home by 6 p. m. This permits them a day's work at the Connersville factory with only slightly over two hours used for travel.

"Auburn executives do not think of airplanes in terms of flying, but as a modern means of transportation similar to the addition of the latest type multiple drill in a machine shop or an adding machine in the accounting department."

Buick Model Change to Be Made Later in Season

E. T. Strong, president and general manager of the Buick Motor Company, announces that the annual inventory of the Buick plant will be taken in September of this year instead of December as has been usual in past years.

This change is made in accordance with the previous announcement by Buick that the customary midsummer model change would be deferred to conform with the suggestion of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce for a uniform new model policy in the industry.

The production of the 1931 Buick straight eight will be continued throughout the summer months, Strong says that no new Buick models will be available [illegible] prior to December. He points out that the current Buick has met with such widespread acceptance by the motoring public that the advancements it embodies will continue to be made available to buyers down to the time of the new announcement period, Strong says.

"The change in the time of the inventory period to conform to the new change of model policy will be of benefit to the Buick working force. It will enable employment to be continued throughout the winter and will be a decided advantage to the workers during the entire winter months."

Cancer Heredity Recessive, Test By Woman Shows

CHICAGO, Aug. 1 (AP)—After following four generations of laboratory mice through sickness and health for four years, Dr. Maud Slye, associate professor of pathology in the University of Chicago, said today she concluded that inheritance of freedom from cancer is more likely than the inheritance of susceptibility to it.

Mating a disease-free male with a female of cancer-ridden parentage, the first generation revealed no pathologic growths, she said. Of the second generation 27 were non-cancerous and nine cancerous. The third generation, she said, showed even less than a 3 to 1 non-cancerous ratio, which demonstrated to her satisfaction that cancer is a recessive rather than a dominant Mendelian trait.

CITY AWAITING REUNION CROWD OF 80TH'S VETS

Mothers' Parade Saturday To Be High Point; Special Mass Arranged.

With final plans completed for the twelfth annual national reunion of the 80th (Blue Ridge) Division, A. E. F., thousands of veterans today prepared for the "zero" hour Thursday morning, which will officially open the convention.

Boy Scouts will be on duty at all railroad stations, principal street intersections and other entries to the city to direct visitors to the convention headquarters in the Fort Pitt Hotel.

The reunion will open officially with registration at 9 a. m. Thursday. Luncheon will follow the registration of the delegates in the assembly room of the hotel, where the work of the year will be reviewed.

Sight-seeing trips for former soldiers and their families have been planned for Thursday.

Business sessions will be continued Friday. Sightseeing trips through several manufacturing plants have been announced. A boat ride on the Ohio River will be a part of the evening's entertainment.

The War Mothers' Parade Saturday at 2 p. m. will be one of the outstanding events of the convention. All mothers of the Pittsburgh district whose sons served in the Army, Navy or Marine Corps will be honored in the parade. Every mother who sends her name and address to the Eightieth Veterans' Association headquarters, Grant Building, will be called for by automobile, driven in the parade and returned to her home.

Military mass at St. Patrick Church, Liberty avenue and Seventeenth street, will be held Sunday morning at 11 o'clock. The annual nondenominational memorial service will be held in the English room of the Fort Pitt Hotel.

A special performance at the Stanley Theater has been announced. The convention will officially close with taps at 11 p. m. Sunday.

BROADWAY EPISODES—By Mark Hellinger

"State of Maine Express"

IN THE BAGGAGE car, two men were talking. One was Pete Quinn, the Pullman conductor. The other was Steve Franklin, the baggageman. Steve was grumbling.

"I hate them corpses," he grunted. "They gimme the creeps. Me being in the baggage service so long, you'd think I'd be used to 'em by now. But am I? Not me. They still gimme the creeps."

Pete nodded.

"Me too. I don't blame you. Sitting in this cold car with a stiff for company. It's not so good."

Two this trip, eh?" he muttered. "Well, I don't blame you for feeling queer. Two stiffs at once, eh? Seems like you'd be used to it, though, Steve. Me, I couldn't stand it. But it seems like you'd be used to it.

"So long," said Steve.

"And why should he leave Mildred more than Tom or me? Because you're her husband? A fine reason that would be. And stop talking about dough. The old man is hardly cold yet. Mildred will give you what's coming to you. Don't you worry."

Pete walked to the door that would lead him into the next car back. He didn't like the way Steve was talking. A money job was a money job. If stiffs entered the work every once in a while, wasn't Steve getting paid for it? Besides, a guy that felt squeamish about stiffs was nothing but superstitious. A still was a stiff—and what could a stiff do to you?

"Ice, buddy," he said. "We want ice. Ice. Get it. I-C-E. That spells ice. Bring us plenty this time so you won't have to work so hard. Come on now. Move. Wait. Here's a buck. Maybe that'll get me what I want."

The door closed.

"It isn't that I'm mercenary," he insisted. "It's just that I can't help wondering how he divided his money. He always was a queer old gentleman, you know. There's no telling what he might have done."

"What's the difference where you're buried? Pop knew that just as well as we do. But he just wanted to make a little trouble."

Oh, dear. Oh, dear. Poor father dead. It seems so strange to think of poor father dead. Oh dear, oh dear."

She wept softly into the new handkerchief. Harry placed a comforting arm about her. A short knock and the porter entered with a small box.

"Aw, baloney," he said. "It's not enough."

"It was your fault, pa. You always was too easy. Always. It ain't as if you didn't know what New York was goin' to be like. You and I was married there—and you knew just what was gonna happen to Mary if we let her go there alone.

"You thought so, too, ma. Don't say you didn't, just because somethin' happened. When you got letters from Mary tellin' you how well she was doin' in the store, wasn't you proud? Didn't you show her letters to Mrs. Harmon and Mrs. Rorbauer? Didn't you?"

Mrs. Milton began to tremble again. Mr. Milton saw that he had talked too much. He clutched her closer.

Mr. Milton gave up trying to comfort her. He cried too. Loudly and unashamed. The passengers looked more uncomfortable than ever.

"Fine life, this bein' a baggageman," he muttered. "Checkin' up on stiffs. Yeah—"

"No value," it read.

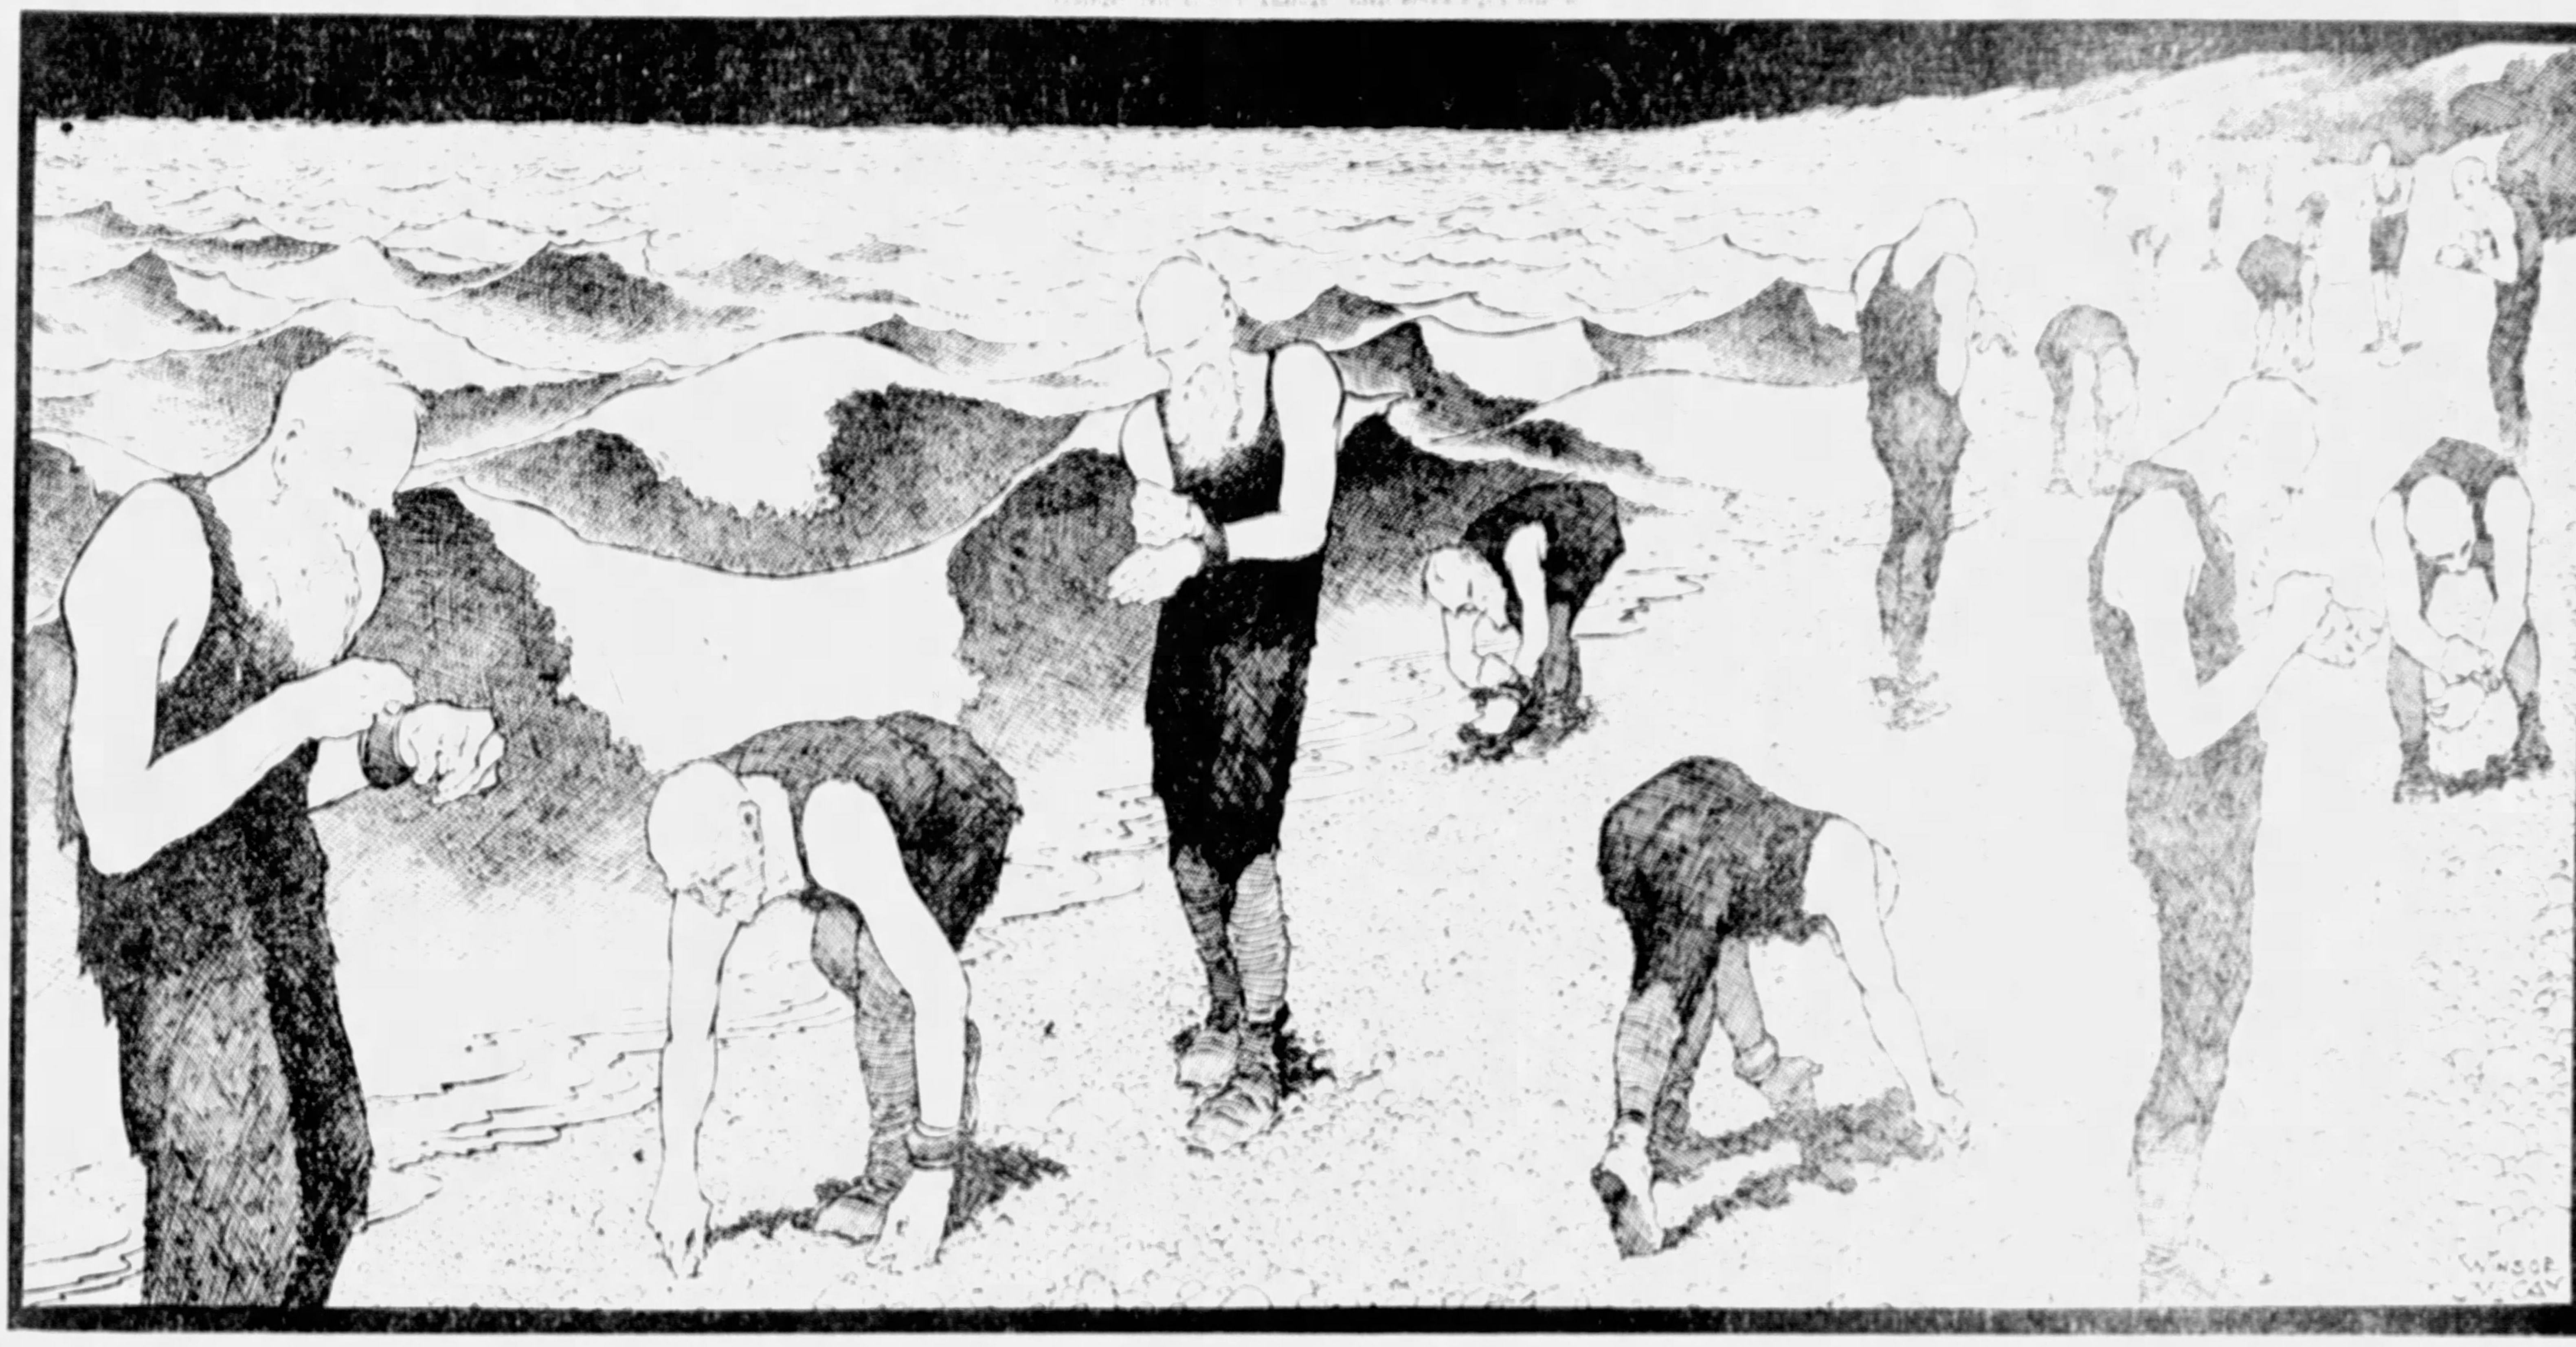
YOUR MAGIC BRACELET



"The selfsame song that found a path
Through the sad heart of Ruth, when sick for home,
She stood in tears amid the alien corn;
The same that ofttimes hath
Charm'd magic casements, opening on the foam
Of perilous seas, in faery lands forlorn."

Each of us has such a bracelet, not one that will turn iron to gold, but that will turn failure to success, time lost into useful time.

This picture of old men on the shore illustrates a story told by the Indian poet Rabindranath Tagore.

It is a story that applies to many of us, the story of a man that might have achieved the success that he sought, but ceased PAYING ATTENTION and thus threw away his magic chance.

IN these beautiful lines from Keats' Ode to a Nightingale it is the word "magic" in the next to the last line that seizes your attention.

Living in the prosaic world of material facts, necessities and limitations, we seek the impossible, the unknowable, all the things that are contained in that mysterious word MAGIC.

Alexander the Great traveled far to see one that dealt in magic.

Some of our ablest, most cold blooded financiers of today consult those that tell fortunes, and believe what they tell them.

In the mere telling, provided it is based on an assumption of magic powers, there is fascination. A few days ago, the guests of a well known house were entertained by an individual professing the qualities of clairvoyance, telling the future, fortune telling and magic generally. He predicted positively, mentioning names and dates, various things that in all probability will not happen. But dozens of educated men and women made memoranda of the address, far more earnestly than they would have done had they been listening to some learned professor imparting positive knowledge.

Magic appeals to us, and Rabindranath Tagore's story of the magic pebble, to which those that read this page on Sundays have seen an earlier reference, has a meaning for every human being, important to our lives and our success, a meaning far from magic and other IMPOSSIBILITIES.

The Indian poet tells of a man who, in his youth, was told:

"Somewhere along the ocean's edge there is a pebble that possesses the magic power to transform iron into gold. YOU, if you choose to make the effort and if you will PAY ATTENTION, can find that pebble and become earth's richest man, with power to change a mountain of iron ore into a mountain of pure gold.

"All that you need do is go, seek, and above all, BE ATTENTIVE."

He started out, from sunrise until dark, day after day, through weeks, months, years he walked along the ocean's shore touching the iron bracelet on his wrist with one pebble after another. He tried tens, thousands, millions of pebbles.

One night as it was growing dark, too late for more work, when the young man had grown old and discouraged, he gave up for the day and went home, as he had done so often.

The first person that he met stopped him and said: "What's that on your wrist? Where did you get it?"

The man, surprised, looked down and saw his bracelet, formerly of iron, mysteriously and magically changed into pure yellow gold.

Some time during the day, some one of thousands of pebbles that he had picked up, touched to his bracelet and dropped, had been the magic pebble, and had changed the iron into gold. BUT, and here is the lesson.

THE MAN HAD CEASED TO PAY ATTENTION, HE WAS WORKING MECHANICALLY.

In his work, selecting pebble after pebble and touching them to the bracelet, he had ceased to look, to take notice. His CONCENTRATION had vanished.

Now it is dark, he is old, too weary to go back over the long distance he had traveled that day, to seek the treasure picked up and tossed aside.

Old, discouraged, he did not live to resume his search next day.

That is a story for old men to tell to young men, and young women. It is a story for those, not too old for useful ATTENTIVE work, to tell to THEMSELVES, taking its meaning TO THEMSELVES.

That man, seeking the magic pebble, started out in life as we ALL start, full of energy, enthusiasm, belief in his success. He would FIND the magic pebble, if it took him a day or ten years. Once found he would never let go of it and wealth beyond dreams would be his forever.

Thus he started, and thus a great majority of us start in life. Full of hope, determination, energy and CONCENTRATION.

At first we pay careful attention to what we do. We give great care to the little things as well as the big things. We criticise ourselves for any shortcomings. But gradually a change comes.

EAGER ATTENTION becomes DULL ROUTINE. That which seemed important and full of promise at first becomes dull, hardly worth while.

The man in Rabindranath Tagore's story, when he started out, looked carefully at every pebble. Each time he touched a pebble to his iron bracelet he looked carefully at the bracelet to see if magic had worked upon it.

As days passed, months, and then years, he continued his work in routine fashion. His ATTENTION diminished, he looked less and less frequently at the bracelet, and finally looked at it not at all, picking up the pebbles, touching the bracelet mechanically, dropping them, paying no attention to that upon which in the beginning he had concentrated so earnestly.

Finally the moment came, some one of the many thousands of pebbles changed the iron into gold, only to be thrown away as he had thrown away endless others, without looking, and he died a failure.

We are not, like the Indian poet's disappointed old man, engaged in hunting for magic.

But we are all of us interested in the pursuit of success, usefulness and HONOR, a pursuit in which close attention, unremitting concentration are necessary.

There are no magic pebbles, there is nothing that will change iron into gold or glass into diamonds.

But there is within the brain a "MAGIC TOUCH," composed ninety per cent of hard work and ten per cent inspiration, that will change failure into success, give the highest possible value to time that formerly was worth nothing, and lift a man from the ruck and routine of those that "go through the motions."

That magic power, as real as anything on earth, is in every one of us. It is nearly always active in youth. It has truly been said: "Every child is a genius, and every genius a child."

The child is a genius because he does not ADMIT any impossibility. And every genius is a child, because he retains the child's hopes, beliefs and earnestness.

We begin carefully, conscientiously, taking greatest pains, as did the man in Tagore's story of the magic pebble.

Like that man the great majority of us gradually drift into routine.

It is the WILL POWER WITHIN US that starts us working and trying. It is the gradual letting down and weakening of will power that changes us from the ranks of those that TRY to the great crowd of those that DRIFT.

If, as on the first or second day, so to the last, Tagore's man, trying the pebbles, had retained his WILL TO SUCCEED, if he had retained his belief that the thing could be done, that the pebble was there and would be found, if he did his share, he would have found it.

But he continued the FORMALITY of work and gave up CONCENTRATION upon it. And when he learned that possibilities as described really existed, it was too late. Night had come, bringing darkness, and his turn and his opportunity had gone by.

Study this picture and if, fortunately, you are not in need of the lesson that it teaches, hand the picture and the Tagore story to somebody that does need them.

To cultivation of the will, stimulation of ambition, add a renewal each day of the solemn vow: "I WILL SUCCEED in proportion to my ability. I WILL be a useful man, and I SHALL KEEP ON TRYING."

Schopenhauer said pessimistically: "A man surely can do what he wills to do, but he cannot determine what he wills." And Einstein, the great scientist, quotes that saying of Schopenhauer's with approval.

But Schopenhauer is wrong, and Einstein is misled in his approval of Schopenhauer.

There is more truth, inspiration and power in old Samuel Johnson's "Sir, we know that the will is free, and there's an end of it."

Schopenhauer's saying means that a man can do what his will tells him to do, but he cannot control his own will, in other words, he cannot make himself WILL to do that which he ought to do.

All of that is bosh and nonsense.

The will is FREE, on earth, within the limitations of our ability, and our surroundings.

An inhabitant of the Congo cannot by any will make himself the Mayor of New York. He cannot even will to be Mayor, for he doesn't know that New York exists, or has a Mayor.

But he CAN will to be the best inhabitant of the CONGO, the most useful, the ablest in killing and bringing ashore hippopotamuses for his friends to eat, the most courageous in tracking down and killing lions to protect his friends' lives.

Each of us can WILL to do the thing that is useful in his corner of the world, whether it be the Congo, New York, Seattle, Peking or Timbuctoo.

The problem before each of us is to do the best thing that can be done, WHERE we are, and AS we are.

To do the best that we can means to change iron into gold, in the best possible sense. It means to change hitherto wasted time into golden productive time.

It means to make of our lives something worth while, contributing to the welfare of others.

It means to make us contributors to the most important of all golden things, THE GOLDEN RULE.

As [illegible] PAY ATTENTION. As you go through life, [illegible] up to the highest pitch.

[illegible] "What's the use?" [illegible] time in the grave to ask that question.

In your brain is the magic power TO BE USEFUL, [illegible] innate abilities, the power [illegible] and avoid deadly routine. [illegible] strength of will, and you can add strength to your will.

[illegible] GET OUT OF IT. [illegible] life's day lasts but a little while.

[illegible] the most useful that you [illegible] and you will find a "Magic Pebble" [illegible] that now seem discouraging [illegible], and to those that depend upon you.

[illegible] to dig it out.

[illegible] not lack of opportunity or the indifference of others, but lack of WILL and energy that strives for success.

GENERAL FECHET

MANY EMINENT authorities believe that the flight of Post and Gatty around the world in less than nine days, coupled with recent rapid transoceanic non-stop flights, has demonstrated that the United States can no longer depend upon isolation for national defense.

The Hearst newspapers desired to obtain comment from one who is an authority on the air phase of our national defense program. Hence they asked General Fechet to answer a direct question which would bring out his views on that subject. The question and his answer are contained in the accompanying article.

Why should I be so optimistic as to think a flight around the world will lead the people to demand an alteration of their plans for defense? That is expecting too much. Nothing short of national calamity will bring that about.

But such ships, thrown from aircraft carriers in the middle of the ocean, could reach our shores with effective high explosive cargoes. There is little use to reckon of this, for, while this is being written larger, swifter planes are in the building which could depart from foreign destinations with heavy cargoes of grief for us and be sure to reach their objectives.

ONLY SMALL MINORITY OF U. S. BUSINESS MEN OPPOSES FARM RELIEF PLAN, SAYS CAMPBELL

Federal Wheat Purchases Were Justified, Contends Agricultural Expert in Defense of Farmer

THIS IS THE second of a series of articles on the American agricultural situation by Thomas D. Campbell, international farm expert. In the first article Mr. Campbell warned of an impending "farm revolt" against the cities and industry. In this article he discusses the opposition to farm relief measures.

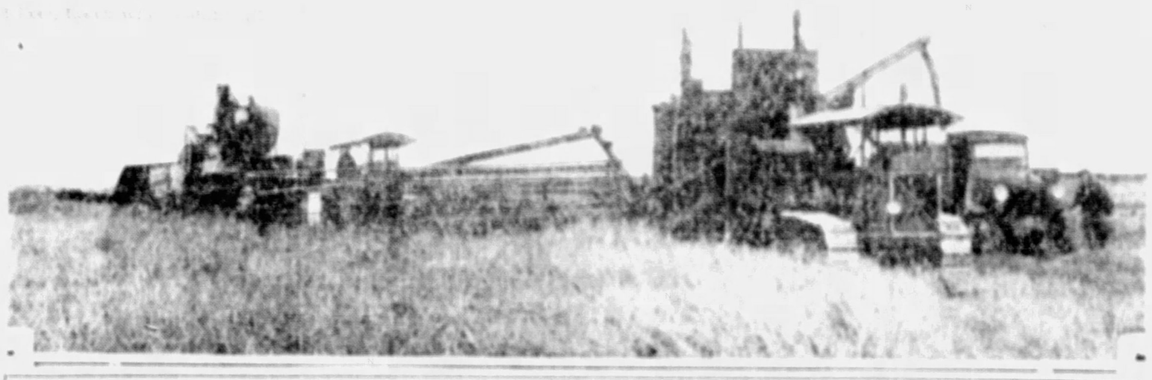
By THOMAS D. CAMPBELL

(As Told to Earl REEVES)

AN EXTENSIVE CAMPAIGN

quite naturally that opposition to the Federal Farm Board's efforts to stabilize agricultural conditions should come from the gentlemen who, as buyers, profit by the system of taking farm products to the markets and selling them at forced sales, and of holding these products until the farmer, quite naturally the object of the government purchases, will accept the minimum of what they are willing to pay.

JAMES C. STONE, chairman of the Federal Farm Board, the policies of which are discussed in the accompanying article by Thomas D. Campbell, especially commends the much criticized policy of Federal wheat purchases. Mr. Stone also frames a plan of cooperation of the farm board.



REAPING—Tractor-drawn harvesting machinery in action on one of the big farms in the Middle West, where the agriculture problem is now acute. This is an item of expense on the farm. Underwood Photo

Stabilizing
Without Panic Purchase Won't Be Sound

But had there been a general business depression, with panic threatened, such a stabilizing purchase would have been sound. The farmers, carry over of wheat with which the War Department is content, facing as it is the hazards of grasshoppers and vital food supplies, 150,000,000 bushels, a net margin of safety is not great. Grasshoppers are well known to reduce harvested crops by hundreds of millions of bushels, local hailstorms can do, in an hour, far more damage across hundreds of square miles than the entire carry-over of wheat possibly could do in a year. Crop estimates as much as 200,000,000 bushels between good years, Canada's crop was estimated as much as 500,000,000 bushels. Truly, there is nothing alarming about the carry-over of wheat now held by government purchase or to be purchased by the farm board, which is not greatly in excess of the wartime safety margin and less than the margin of variation between one good crop and bad.

Hold Crops
Opposition Comes From Men Who Take Profit

It should be noted that the opponents of the plan to stabilize farm prices do not oppose it on the ground that the government has taken about $200,000,000 of the taxpayer's money "gone" as well as country and "thrown it away" in order to help only a part of the population, the farmers.

The money is not thrown away. It was used to purchase a non-perishable product, a liquid asset, quickly convertible into cash. With the holding the dumping on an already demoralized market helped the farmers, certainly but it is at least arguable whether the action may not have helped the urban two-thirds even more. And as for the cost, I believe the "paper loss" on wheat now held (July) by the farm board is less than $75,000,000, and it is quite possible that before all this wheat has been disposed of this loss will be little.

What We Believed
United States Thought It Had Prosperity Secret

The nation prepared to strike the first vital blow will win.

The first blow must be struck from the air, so the country with the most effective air power will come out victor.

And don't forget one thing, whether it be learned from the flight of Post and Gatty or by any other obvious method, our water frontiers no longer protect us.

The Atlantic Ocean is not as we're told as the English Channel was in Napoleon's day. That channel saved England from Napoleon, not once. But when Blériot flew the English Channel, all Englishmen knew that Britannia must take something else to rule the waves.

The Atlantic Ocean is little more protection to us than the English Channel is to Great Britain. So far as protection from isolation is concerned, the Atlantic is but a wet ditch, the Pacific but a mill pond.

The third article by Thomas D. Campbell will appear in an early issue, probably next Sunday.

Post-Gatty Flight Warns U. S., Says Fechet

For a moment the United States believed that they had discovered the secret of eternal prosperity, the magic of unlimited riches, the way to make the whole world contented—that is to say, nothing less than the undiscoverable secret of social peace, by increasing simultaneously riches, culture, amusements, virtue and the possibility of ameliorating one's fate.

GUGLIELMO FERRERO:

America's Faith in Prosperity Must Face Eternal Realities

RECENTLY DR. FERRERO, distinguished European historian, revisited the United States for the first time in 22 years. He traversed it from coast to coast studying, discussing, analysing its people, its institutions, its trends of life and thought. In a series of articles of which the accompanying is the fifth, Dr. Ferrero records frankly his impressions of America, especially as compared with those he gathered here in 1909.

Earl Carroll Is Forever Doing Things

By BUSHNELL DIMOND

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.

Precious Bulletins

Ha! Individuality!

"Every girl playing in the new Earl Carroll theater will have an individual dressing table. Each table will be distinctive. It will also be as private and as completely the property of the user as the dresser in her boudoir at home. The dressing shelf which has been a traditional part of life in the chorus is relegated to the discard by Earl Carroll.

Too Many Reflections

"The old style mirror made it necessary for a girl to pick her own face out of the mirror... reflections. By the new system she can sit back in comfort in the make-up process. These many thoughtful conveniences for the girls should reflect more enthusiasm and spontaneity in their work on the stage.

"Each mirror and table is equipped with separate lights. The lights will be... graduated for make-up purposes and... hooded to protect the eyes of the user.

FRANK BORZAGE is a sentimental Italian, and he knocks on wood when he starts a new picture.

Tube Inventor Quits Old Firm To Experiment

Lee DeForest to Continue Work on Television, Raises Money.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 1.—Dr. Lee DeForest has severed his connections with the DeForest Radio Company of Passaic, N. J. Renowned as the father of radio because of his invention of the vacuum tube making modern radio possible, DeForest has affiliated himself with the American Television Laboratories, Ltd., of Los Angeles.

The Laboratories have applied for authority from the Federal Radio Commission to erect a new 10,000 watt television transmitter at Los Angeles using visual wave lengths between 2,000 and 2,100 kilocycles.

Charles E. Huffman, formerly chief engineer of the Jenkins Television Corporation, subsidiary of the DeForest Radio, signed the application. James W. Garside, former president of both DeForest Radio and its television subsidiary, is president of the new firm.

Mellon Has Faint Voice

Won't you move just a little closer, Mr. Secretary ...

For the first ... his speech his voice went over well, but suddenly he settled comfortably in his chair, at the same time getting farther from the microphone. His voice became almost inaudible. A note was written and placed in front of him. Once more he moved closer to the microphone and the broadcast finished without further incident.

In succeeding broadcasts the Secretary's voice was heard better. Yet NBC engineers have now taken the trouble to place the microphone just as close as possible to Mellon when he is talking.

Still Read Speeches

"Can't be too careful," these government officials. But some day there will be a ... enterprising enough, facile enough, courageous enough to speak what is in his heart without benefit of notes. LOWELL THOMAS, ADVENTURER, author and radio reporter, tells me that his ... ing digest of the daily news has been more enlightening than a half dozen college educations.

Mr. McNamee

When he makes an error in pronunciation, scores of radio listeners write to protest. When he speaks of an historical event, others write to relate conflicting historical opinions. When he speaks of a ... colony or fanatical religious sect, those close to the movement write to narrate interesting facts. And so on and on.

Radio listeners take exception when the ... is pronounced ... is used in pronouncing ... as rather. They claim that such are ultra-English, theatrical and high hat. I myself can corroborate this.

To use a wrong accent in pronouncing a geographical name has always brought scores of letters. Recently he received a message from the assistant secretary of state of the Newfoundland government stating that Newfoundland is pronounced with accents on the first and third syllables, the second syllable slurred. Thomas hadn't slurred the latter enough.

FORD MILLER, WCAE announcer, was caught grinning just before he left for a Canadian vacation where he's fishing, of all things.

Club Committees Discussing Dates For Events of Fall

By PATRICIA PITT

Before many weeks the huntsman's horn will be echoing and re-echoing in the green valleys near Pittsburgh, and one of the old-time sports of hunting will start that stirring old tune, "A Hunting We Will Go," ringing in the crisp autumn air. For fall is only a few weeks off now.

Already members of the different clubs are remembering with regret the good times of former falls, and are setting dates for the opening of the hunting season of 1931.

Of course the hunting [illegible] as the Rolling Rock Hunt [illegible] be held as I've mentioned before [illegible] tember 26. And from [illegible] women and debutantes will hunt until heavy snows end the season.

The Sewickley Hunt will open the season on the first Saturday of October, when a large field will turn out for the sport. And there'll probably be a dinner to celebrate the first hunting day, although definite plans haven't yet been made. The John O. Burgwins are joint master of fox hounds.

Immediately after the Pittsburgh Hunt horse show on September 11 and 12 the hunting season will be on for members. And every Wednesday and Saturday morning there'll be hunts. And there are always breakfasts in the hunt clubhouse afterwards. George H. Cherrington is master of fox hounds.

Westmoreland Hunt

On October 3 the Westmoreland Hunt will have its first cub hunting day with Torrence Miller as master of fox hounds.

Entry forms for the Westmoreland Hunt horse show on September 18 and 19 at the polo grounds, Greensburg, are being mailed, and the last entries must be made by September 5, according to Mr. Miller.

With the fall everyone in the social set, from little girls and boys to their grandparents, will be riding. Riding schools for the very young set will open of course, for this sport is included in every society child's education.

Madelon's Mirror of Feminine Fancy

THESE are the days when we are all feeling rather "Mo[illegible] Muller-esque" ... and Beckett's are helping the feeling along with their announcement this week. It seems that we who would aspire to a lovely garden [illegible] must remember the "ounce of prevention" thought ... and plant flowers now. Let the "ounce" be one of [illegible] seeds ... and the exquisite blooms next May will doubtless prove a panacea for many ills. It's worth planning [illegible] and an able assistant at Beckett's Original Seed Store, 101 Federal street, just over the Sixth Street bridge. Ask for "Elsie."

. . . Never-Never Land

ARE you haunted by the shadow of "never-never land"? Do you find yourself shaking your head and saying, "Oh, I could never, never wear that dress"? [illegible] We know the secret of how to banish your never-never woes. Mrs. [illegible] holds the key that unlocks women from just such chains of unhappiness. Through her patient, understanding efforts many women have won their way to charm and grace that they had long since given up. Hers is a genius that finds its outlet in transforming unlovely figures into lines of supple comfort and attractiveness ... and then dressing them as only a true artist can. Years of careful work and interest have built her a clientele of her own ... crowded with grateful hearts and complete satisfaction ... where she reigns supreme. WE'VE discovered a way to keep at least one jump ahead of the good old summertime! Down at Ritter & Morrison there is a simple smartly styled shoe that was just made to escort one on vacations ... on hot days in town ... and to add a bit to the swelter of warm streets. It's a natural lines shoe ... built with the Mexican Arch Aid that does such praiseworthy things to all tired feet. The kind of shoe that we find ourselves slipping into with a gentle sigh ... knowing we have taken the first step to real comfort. No longer is it necessary to kick off our shoes in order to realize the cool ease in hot weather. These shoes seem to have been specially designed for just such occasions. Don't stand discomfort a moment longer ... get yourselves a pair the first thing (for $8.50) And preferably in the morning when the notable Ritter & Morrison unhurried service is at its height. 536 Liberty Avenue.

That's just what you may expect if you take your guests to the Willing Cup Tea Room where Senora Teresa presides. Everything is carried out delightfully ... even to the unusually decorated walls that catch everyone's eye! And this week there is a special luncheon being served from 2 to 5 o'clock on Monday and Friday only. Better stop worrying about that little bridge party you were planning ... and take your guests here where there is no extra charge for parties! And don't forget the Golden Wave Room with its 50c and 75c lunches ... its 75c and $1 dinners ... and its special chicken or steak dinner for $1.25 ... with tea leaf reading free. Beckett's have long held first place for quality seeds ... and have a complete assortment on hand right now. Bridge Players Commend 'Big Twelve' for Action Toward Uniform System

By ERNEST H. HEINRICHS

Sun-Telegraph Bridge Expert.

The exclusive publication in this column of the "Official Contract Bridge Game" several weeks ago attracted general attention among bridge players all over the country, and many interesting comments have been sent us by correspondents expressing their opinion on the action taken by the "big twelve" in New York City.

That the trend of these expressions was very largely of a favorable character proves beyond a doubt that the confusion existing in the new game created by the many conflicting systems of contracting for the declaration was condemned by everybody having the best interests of contract bridge at heart.

Commends Move

Miss Ruth L. B., of Latrobe, wrote:

"I was very much pleased to read your account of the 'Official Contract Bridge Game' and I am surely voicing the opinion of every contract player in the land when I say an 'official' system is just what the game needs.

"I have played the new game for several years, and I have been convinced of its superiority over auction bridge from the very beginning, but the confusion often brought about by the different systems used by various players was very annoying.

"It usually meant that at the start of the game the partners would have to go into 'conference' to find out whether they used the Culbertson system, the Vanderbilt system, the Work system, the Whitehead system, the Shepard system, the Lenz system or some other, and as a rule it meant confusion and dissatisfaction. Being a teacher of bridge I have studied all of the different systems, and I found that they were about equally efficient if two partners played the same. I have often wondered why a uniform system had not been brought out long ago because it will mean so much for the future of the game."

Right Step Taken

L. M. O., of Wheeling, W. Va., writes:

"If the big experts had abandoned their petty jealousies long ago for the best interests of the game, the confusion of systems would never have occurred. I am glad to hear that they have come to see the light. An official standard uniform system of contracting, in which the same conventions are used by all players, will make contract bridge the most perfect and most popular game we have ever known."

The other communications of which there were quite a number expressed the same general opinion in favor of the 'official' game and if space would allow it we should like to have published them all.

It sometimes happens that you hold a hand which has a distribution of the cards that make it worth defensively two tricks only, but which at your own make is easily worth a great many more. In such a case it is generally advisable to make an opening bid to the very limit of your holding, because under these circumstances a course of dilly-dallying or an opening approach with a low bid might prove disastrous.

Worth 10 Tricks

Take this hand for example: Spades none, hearts 4, clubs A K Q, diamonds K Q J 10 9 8 7 6 5, while defensively that hand may not take more than two tricks in clubs, as the queen may be trumped at an adverse suit make and you may not be able to take a single trick in diamonds, the hand with diamonds the trump is sure of taking 11 tricks. We saw this hand held by a player in the rooms of the Pittsburgh Chess Club, and he promptly opened the contracting with a bid of five diamonds, a bid his partner, holding the ace in that suit and sensing the situation, raised to a little slam, which of course was easily made. And it was well that he pursued such an aggressive course, because if he had opened with a lower bid it is quite probable that his opponents might have outbid him in spades or hearts, in either of which suits they could also have made a slam. Here is the deal.

NORTH.
Spades—6 5.
Hearts—5 2.
Clubs—J 10 9 8 7 6 3.
Diamonds—A 4.

WEST.
Spades—10 9 8 7 4 3 2.
Hearts—A Q J 9.
Clubs—0.
Diamonds—5 3.

EAST.
Spades—A K Q J.
Hearts—K 10 8 7 6 5.
Clubs—4 3 2.
Diamonds—0.

SOUTH (Declarer).
Spades—0.
Hearts—4.
Clubs—A K Q.
Diamonds—K Q J 10 9 8 7 6 5.

West opens the play by leading the ace of hearts, followed by the queen of hearts. This game goes to prove that while it is often wise "to make haste slowly," there are also many instances which demonstrate that "he who hesitates is lost."

Bridge Pointers

In contract bridge the bidding for the declaration is the most important feature of the game, and if you want to become a proficient player be sure to learn this part of the contest.

Make your original bid always on sound, correct principles.

In contracting for the declaration the original bid may be compared to the keystone of a building. If its foundation is not based upon sound solidity the structure will not stand.

Never convey to your partner inaccurate information. Partners should always be in perfect accord or as the old saying goes, "A house divided against itself must surely fall."

Bidding four-card suits in the days of auction bridge was not generally recommended; is considered perfectly sound in contract bidding, especially by the approach-forcing system. Biddable four-card suits when held by dealer or second hand after dealer has passed are: Ace, 10, seven, six; king, queen, nine, eight; king, jack, seven, six, and others, provided the suit is worth at least two probable trump tricks.

OPERA SEASON REACHES PEAK IN CHAUTAUQUA

Symphonies, Operatic Series, Organ Recitals Slated; Big Crowds at Tenth Season.

CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y., Aug. 1.—With three operas, a series of symphony concerts, choral programs and organ recitals scheduled for the next fortnight, Chautauqua Institution, one of America's great summer educational centers, is preparing for the climax of its music season.

The opera season here opened with a capacity audience several weeks ago gathered to hear Madame Butterfly presented by Charles Kullman, tenor of the Berlin State Opera, and Mila Miloradovich, soprano, in the title roles. Hundreds of vacationists, students and music lovers thronged Norton Memorial Hall to witness the performance.

STOESSEL DIRECTS

Under the general direction of Albert Stoessel, conductor of the symphony orchestra, the Chautauqua Opera Company opens the week's program Monday with a presentation of Offenbach's Tales of Hoffman. Leoncavallo's Pagliacci and Wolf Ferrari's Secret of Suzanne are scheduled for next Saturday and the following Tuesday.

Included in the casts of the operas to be presented are Mary Catherine Akins, Mila Miloradovich and Ruby Mercer, sopranos; Brownie Peebles and Marion Selee, contraltos; Charles Kullman, Willard Young, Karl Theman and Alfredo Valenti, baritone.

Stoessel has included Schubert's unfinished symphony on his first orchestral program of the week, scheduled for Wednesday, when Jean Rappaport will appear as piano soloist. Other numbers include Weber's Oberon Overture and Sibelius' Finlandia.

Saturday, August 8, will be National Army at Chautauqua. Stoessel has included an extra concert of patriotic numbers to celebrate the event.

Another extra concert scheduled for a matinee performance will be given on Wednesday, when the symphony will play the entire score of Gluck's opera, Orpheus, in concert form.

FEATURE STRAUSS

On Saturday evening a Berlioz-Strauss program will be given. It will include Berlioz's overture "Roman Carnival," Berlioz's valse and marche, Symphony Fantastique, Berlioz's three pieces from the Damnation of Faust, Strauss' five songs for soprano and orchestra.

Hugh Porter, organist for the Institution, will play tomorrow.

Two programs of sacred choral music are also slated for tomorrow with the Chautauqua Choir and soloists of the opera company singing the anthem, "With a Voice of Singing," in the morning, and the regular sacred song service featuring the choir, orchestra and soloists at night. The evening program includes Bevan's "Forth, O Beautiful Heavenly Light."

Stoessel reports that larger audiences than ever before have attended the Chautauqua concerts this year. He expects tens of thousands of persons to hear the orchestra before it completes its tenth season at the end of this month.

Lancaster Veterans Favor Debt Holiday

LANCASTER, Pa., Aug. 1 (INS).—A resolution calling upon Congress to declare a debt holiday on war veterans was approved here by the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The resolution proposed that all ex-service men who are in debt and unable to meet demands of creditors be excused for note payment for the period that the international debt holiday is effective for Germany.

$300 in Coins, Found In Cellar, Spurious

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., Aug. 1 (INS).—Enlarging the cellar of his home here, William Frank was overjoyed to come upon 600 half dollars. By zealous polishing he salvaged 293 of the coins, throwing the rest away because of excessive corrosion.

Then United States secret service operatives examined the coins, pronouncing every one of them spurious.

American Girl Holds Perfect Bridge Hand

PARIS, Aug. 1.—Miss Harriet Black, young American resident of Paris, drew 13 hearts in a recent bridge game at the United States Students and Artists Club. She bid seven before recalling that a modest bid would probably cause her opponents to double, so she kept the grand slam, however, and let the profits go.

Five Sons of Pastor To Fill His Pulpit

SCRANTON, Pa., Aug. 1 (INS).—Five sons of a late pastor of the Myrtle Street Church here will occupy the pulpit of the church on successive Sundays. Rev. J. Clark Callender of Linville, N. J., was the first of the brothers scheduled to preach.

The academy has been state accredited for 50 years. It specializes in training students for their high school certificates. Business and secretarial courses are also listed. Day classes start in September with evening classes opening somewhat later.

The school is located on the fourth, fifth and sixth floors of the Hanan Building, 531 Wood street.

Old School of Art Favored by King

LONDON, Aug. 1.—King George likes the old school of painting and art. He has no time for the modern styles and all the different "isms" cults. He said as much when he visited an exhibition of painting by Prince Nicholas of Greece recently.

The king, who was accompanied by Queen Mary and his sister, Princess Victoria, spent nearly an hour walking around the exhibition.

Curious Kitty

By the Brilliant Satirist Fish

Verses by Carolyn Wells

A moonlight fete was being held by Mrs. Pondicherry,
To whom our Kitty was just now a Social Secretary.
The lady was a beauty and full of coquetry,
And her husband was as jealous as a mortal man can be!

Gone were her good intentions, her trepidations fled,
She slipped the note to Madame, and to the arbor sped, Climbed spryly up the lattice and clung there to await
The coming of the lovers who had that Heavenly date.

A messenger came with a note—he gave it to an aide,
Who gave it to a footman, who gave it to a maid;
Who brought it straight to Kitty, who noticed at a glance
It was for Madame, and unsealed! Could she resist the chance?

She stepped behind a pillar, screened by some hanging vines,
And, safe from observation, she read these written lines:
"I'll be at the Rose Pergola at quarter of eleven:
Oh, meet me there my angel love, give me a taste of Heaven!"

Soon through the dusky shadows a
And Madame Pondicherry came from the other side.
Kitty leaned down to see them—the lattice work gave way!
And that's why Curious Kitty is unemployed today!

Why They Closed The Gay Night Clubs in Abyssinia

Or, at Least, the Emperor of the Original Land of Sheba Is Trying to Close Them Because His Officers and Nobles Win the Favor of the "Hostesses" by Giving Them Their Jewel-Studded Weapons, but the Outlawed Speakeasies Are Protected by the Soldiers and Police Who Have Been Bribed by the Night-Club Owners Just As in the United States Crowds on Main Street of Addis Ababa, Where the Gay Night Clubs Are.

The Emperor's Cousin Won the Foreign Hostess by Handing Her His Jeweled Sword, His Ruby-Studded Dagger and His Pearl-Inlaid Gun. She Hugged Them to Her Heart. The Defeated Rival Then Had a Bright Idea. There Before Him Was His Hated Enemy, Unarmed in Public Probably for the First Time in His Life. Whirling His Own Sword Aloft He Brought It Down With a Fatal Swing Across the Neck of the Emperor's Cousin.

In the Innocent Days Before the Night Clubs Came to Addis Ababa, Abyssinia: a Modest Dancer in Long Skirts, With Her Musicians, Performing Before an Abyssinian Nobleman and His Guests. An Abyssinian Painting. Photo by Ewing Galloway.

ABYSSINIA [illegible] land of the Queen of Sheba, and [illegible] "sheba" [illegible] of "sheik" [illegible] inal Sheba's [illegible] stand for the night clubs [illegible] the "Shebas" of today [illegible].

In an evil hour Haile Selassie I, the new Emperor of Abyssinia, was persuaded to open up his country to the "blessings of civilization." And having done so he is now striving to stop the [illegible] before his young men are [illegible].

Abyssinia or Ethiopia is an ancient and powerful African nation that has managed to [illegible] off the meddling white [illegible] since the days when the Queen of Sheba made [illegible] Solomon, but it was barbaric [illegible] would not do. Visitors were continually pointing out how backward they were, but Menelik, Ras Tafari and other old rulers paid no attention.

It was true that most of Abyssinia's 10,000,000 people liked to eat their meat raw, but since it agreed with them, what of it? Abyssinians go around armed to the teeth, which is very uncivilized, but it seems to make them able to thrash the armies the civilized white man sends in to conquer them. There is no fire department in Addis Ababa, the capital, with its 65,000 inhabitants, but they don't need one because people are careful. Everybody knows that if a fire starts the persons to blame will have their heads cut off.

There is no street cleaning or garbage disposal department, but these tasks are attended to free by wild dogs and buzzards that come in after dark and are so hungry that they will eat even an old boot. In their efficiency they will also eat a man if he lies intoxicated in the gutter at night, but that fact prevents anyone from lying intoxicated in the gutter. The howling and fighting of the dogs at night makes a lot of noise, but nothing like the racket produced by automobile horns, rattling of milk bottles and banging of ash cans in civilized cities.

His Imperial Majesty Haile pointed all this out as his predecessors had done, and at first stood firm against "reform, modernism and uplift," but Abyssinia is now a member of the League of Nations and the pressure became heavy to be like other countries. His subjects had seen moving pictures of the nice paved streets of London, Paris and New York—why couldn't Addis Ababa have these things? And fire engines and even a subway to say nothing of street lights and street cleaners?

Their ruler told them that they could, but he also estimated how much it would cost them in taxes. The subjects shook their heads at this and decided they would rather have their money to spend on themselves than to give it all to the government as in civilized land.

However, they came back at him again. There must be some cheaper way of getting civilized. For example, China had gotten rid of its rulers and become a republic like the United States, and Russia had a whole new scheme of things. If these tramp nations could make themselves up-to-date, why not Abyssinia? Haile answered that China had done nothing but suffer from internal wars ever since, and that the Russians were wearing clothes ten years old and living on black bread and hope.

Nevertheless, Mustapha Kemal had modernized Turkey and gotten away with it. His Majesty claimed that about all this amounted to was forcing women to go unveiled and the men to get out of their bloomers and into long pants and a derby hat. If any of his subjects yearned for pants and pot hats he would not interfere—in fact he wanted to be a liberal monarch and would not object to any civilizing influence that would not saddle the country with a lot of taxes.

If they wanted serums, black bottom dancers, aeroplanes and jazz bands it would be all right. They could have anything within reason provided they imported it and paid for it themselves.

To prove that his heart was in the right place, his Imperial Majesty spent a liberal slice of the Royal income to start the ball rolling. He sent an embassy to Paris to get together a bunch of beautiful dancers who would entertain his young men and give them an idea of what was what in up-to-date civilization. An extremely attractive and accomplished dancer, Lia Niako, a Persian girl who had been appearing in Paris, was selected as the ballerina at head of the troupe. The delegation came, a considerable number of girls at the Emperor's expense, and quite a few others, both men and women, who saw a chance for profit and who paid their own way.

The girls danced and the natives then watched admiringly. Later they met the dancers and those who had come with them, learning many things. Soon Haile Selassie heard from his subjects that they simply must have night life, night clubs, jazz, the wailing saxophone and other things that he had been told were essential parts of every big modern city.

The Emperor made no objection except to wonder how they would organize all this night life in his capital where nobody but dogs and buzzards went out at night, and who would pay for it. It was not many months before he began to find out. Those benevolent extra ladies and gentlemen who had attached themselves to the thoroughly nice delegation of which Miss Lia Niako was the premiere danseuse, were soon joined by others of assorted talents all ready to finance and manage the modernization of Ethiopia.

Haile was not alarmed when restaurants and cafes began to sell meat not raw but cooked by third-rate French chefs. That was all right, he thought, because these places supported themselves. Presently there was singing and dancing there, too. Both these things had existed since the days of Sheba and before, when Ethiopia traded and fought with mighty Egypt under the Pharaohs, but now it was different.

Heretofore the women had danced alone and the men had looked on and applauded, as much out of it as spectators at a prize fight. Now, to the tune of saxophones the men themselves were learning to dance with a lot of foreign women. Bold in dress and manner and astonishingly painted were these foreign ladies. They must be ladies because they were from the capitals of highly civilized Europe, although it was true that there were some Arab girls. The native women called them hussies in their own tongue, but the foreign women said their proper title was hostess.

Abyssinia was beginning to have real night life. With woman and song always goes wine, in night life. For three thousand years or more the Ethiopian had been drinking a home brew known as "tej." It may not have done him any good but it seems never to have done him any harm either, and he was as used to it as a German to his beer.

But the smart foreign hostesses quickly taught the native men that this cheap mild drink was barbarous and uncouth. They must have brandies, liqueurs and above all, French champagnes. These expensive beverages promptly were imported and the effect was plainly visible in the large number of young Abyssinian gentlemen who fell into the gutter and almost went to the dogs and vultures.

Things got so bad that the Emperor, who is also the owner and editor of the capital's principal newspaper, wrote a series of vehement editorials on the subject. An editorial written and signed by an Emperor with power of life and death over his readers ought to carry some weight, and it did, but not as much as the hostesses who got a commission on every drink they could induce their Abyssinian boy friends to buy.

Disgusted at the indifference of his readers, Haile Selassie laid down his editorial pen and tackled them as subjects. He marched from his newspaper office to his palace, put on his royal robes, ascended the throne and issued an imperial edict banning all alcoholic drinks but the national "tej." All legal and open dealers in liquors promptly closed but in a few weeks there were as many gutter-rollers on their way to the dogs as ever. His Majesty was confronted by two things new in Abyssinia—Prohibition and the bootlegger, and they are still with him.

Soldiers would raid the clubs, but in Ethiopia every man is armed, and there would be a clash of swords at the doorway as a few of the guests defended the place, like Horatius at the bridge, until the management informed them that the last bottle of evidence had been removed and innocent "tej" put in its place. These battles at the door soon got to be nothing but stage fights, with a perfunctory clashing of steel and nobody hurt.

Following the practice of highest civilization, the [illegible] to [illegible] the raids or [illegible] protection." [illegible] and raced back to the barracks with a report that they had not found a drop on the premises.

What was to be done? The army was corrupt, the young men were going to the dogs literally and the women right on their heels, all because the Emperor had allowed just a ray or two of the light of civilization to penetrate his dark African empire.

His Majesty, having his imperial [illegible] of the [illegible] come. Abyssinians haven't much ready money, but taxes are [illegible] which makes the cost of living very low and so they don't need much. The favors of these hostesses, however, came high and the drinks they insisted upon were expensive, with the result that soon most of the capital's currency had passed into their [illegible] grasping hands.

Still, the nobles and warriors had considerable movable wealth in another form—jewel-encrusted swords and daggers of great value that were family heirlooms, and these the hostesses were quite willing to accept.

Later the men would borrow money to redeem them. Instead of doing so the hostesses with eyes aflame would usually persuade them to spend the money and let the weapon remain in pawn. Recently Haile was horrified to see many of soldiers going around unarmed.

The other day the scandal came to a tragic climax. One of the Emperor's cousins, having spent all his money and pawned his rings, fell in love with a brand new hostess just arrived from Paris. Her favors were very, very expensive, and many were bidding for them. One of the bidders was a man with whom the cousin had a deadly feud of many years' standing.

At last the Emperor's relative won the French lady by handing her his jeweled sword, his ruby studded dagger and his pearl-inlaid gun. These were treasures indeed, and the [illegible] hugged them to her heart with a joyous laugh.

The defeated rival glowered [illegible] in jealous fury. Then he [illegible] bright idea. There before him sat [illegible] hated enemy, unarmed in public, probably for the first time in his life. The man had lost the girl, but here was the chance of a lifetime to settle that feud in safety, and he promptly did so. Whirling his own sword aloft he advanced and brought it down with a fatal swing across the neck of the Emperor's cousin, who pitched dying at the feet of the hostess.

Royal blood has at last been spilled and now something will have to be done to end this civilizing of Abyssinia, if it costs a revolution.

Murder Mystery Solved by X-Ray

JUST when the shrewdest detectives of Copenhagen, Denmark, police force were about to admit that they were completely baffled about the cause of the death of a woman found at the mouth of the ancient Fortress Langelinie, and that some cold blooded murderer had committed a crime without clues, a woman newspaper reporter suggested that X-ray photographs of the mutilated body be taken. Within a week the murderer was behind the bars, after having given the police a written confession of his guilt.

How the murder mystery was solved by X-ray is one of the most interesting chapters in modern crime annals. The woman who suggested that the police get photographs of the structure of the legless body had the hunch that some distinguishing formation of tissue might be revealed. Her hunch was right; the developed plates showed that the murder victim had one badly infected tubercular lung.

It was assumed that, at some time, she must have been a hospital patient, and a search of X-ray photographs in all Copenhagen hospitals was instituted. A week later such a picture was found definitely identifying the slain woman.

From the hospital records the police got the woman's name and address, and found that she had been dispossessed from an apartment some two months before. Fingerprints on the furniture and door knobs proved beyond a doubt that the former occupant of the apartment was the woman whose dismembered body had baffled the city's ablest detectives.

Further work on the part of the police revealed that the woman had been the sweetheart of a man with whom she had quarreled. The man was located and arrested. For several days he denied all knowledge of the crime, but finally broke down and confessed that he had killed the woman in a fit of temper.

It is probable that Copenhagen police will, in the future, make frequent use of the X-ray to assist in the identification of murder victims mutilated beyond recognition.

Why Yawns Are "Contagious"

Can You Look at These Three Photographs for Five Seconds Without Wanting to Yawn?

A Lion Cub Proving That the Habit of Stretching and Yawning Is Not Confined to Human Beings Alone.

Science Makes Some Interesting Researches Into the Widespread Habit of Gaping and Other Phenomena of Stretching Arms, Legs, Backs, and Finds the Impulse Widespread Among the Animal World

Yawning Is Not Always, Nor Most Frequently, the Result of Being Bored or Sleepy. Science Now Believes, but Is an Effort of the Body to Get Rid of Fatigue Poisons Caused by Holding the Neck Muscles in Rigid Attention. If Ministers and After-Dinner Speakers Would Let Their Hearers Do an Occasional Minute of Leaping Exercises Like the Above They Would Not Be Yawned At.

The Brief Stretching of the Facial Muscles in a Normal Yawn Relieves Them of the "Pain Poison," but It Has Been Found That the Continued Stretching of Them, as in the Case of the Patient in the Dental Chair, Results in an Accumulation of the Same Substance, Producing the Familiar "Stiffness" of the Face Following a Session With the Dentist.

EVERYBODY knows that yawns are contagious. One person yawning in a street car or in a room will cause almost all of them to gape, even if he covers his own gape behind his hand. One person yawning in a subway car can start an epidemic of yawns running up and down each side. And it is a most annoying matter to a minister to have one of his congregation give way to the yawning impulse, for instantly he will look down on a sea of faces which, although their mouths may be politely covered by their palms or by handkerchiefs, he knows are wide open in the supreme symbol of boredom.

There is no other gesture or muscular action that seems to have such an irresistible impulse of imitation among its beholders. If one of a party or an assemblage shifts his or her legs, or extends arms over his or her head, few, if any, of the others follow suit. Yet the shifting of arms and legs and stretching are closely allied to the yawn.

Why, then, do we feel that overpowering impulse to gape when we see someone else doing it? And why does even the photograph of a yawn give us this desire, as anyone can prove for himself by looking intently for a few seconds at the photographs of the gaping baby, monkey and lion at the top of this page?

Science has newly discovered some interesting and surprising things about yawning, and among these the probable explanation of why yawning is "contagious." They were brought out recently by researches carried on in England by Sir Thomas Lewis, famous expert on heart disease. Dr. Lewis was not especially concerned about yawns. What interested him was pain, and specifically that agonizing kind of pain which occasionally affects a diseased heart and which physicians call angina pectoris. The clues about yawns and yawning were uncovered incidentally.

It now appears that the yawn has been misunderstood somewhat. While it is true that a tiresome sermon or dreary after-dinner speech will cause an irresistible desire among the listeners to open their jaws at the tormentor, it also can happen from the very opposite cause. In the theatre there is frequently an outbreak of yawns following a tense, dramatic scene that has gripped everyone's attention so much that nobody has moved a muscle. In fact, it is the muscle, not the mind, that is the villain behind the yawn.

Animals do not yawn when they are bored. It is hard to bore an animal anyway, because as soon as his surroundings no longer interest him he calmly put his head down and catches up on his sleep. If he yawns it will more likely be when he wakes up. A long, dull sermon or a speech alone will not produce gapes unless the hearers feel obliged to pay attention, or at least pretend interest.

When anyone says that a bore gives him a pain in the neck, that is scientifically accurate, or would be if Nature did not intervene and save the bored person from the actual pain by forcing him to gape. This involuntary jaw movement is a matter of chemistry and the church yawn comes about in this way.

It is the duty of the choir and congregation to keep their eyes on the minister's face, which is practically a fixed object through the sermon. This keeps the muscles of every neck motionless but tense, because they must pull against each other to keep the listeners' faces aimed at the minister's countenance.

If the preacher is very interesting, the emotional reactions cause the congregation's hearts to pump vigorously enough to circulate the blood over the high spot of the body, the head, and thoroughly flush the neck muscles, and nothing happens. But if the discourse is tiresome, the nervous system relaxes as does an animal's preparatory to going to sleep. While the listener does not go to sleep, his heart slows down and circulation in the neck becomes sluggish. The result is that certain poisons, known as fatigue toxins, generated in the strained muscles collect and in time would cause cramplike pains.

Nature, however, will not let this happen if she can help it, and before the poisoning reaches the consciousness in the form of pain, she begins to urge the bored person to cure the situation by a nice, big, rude yawn, which the victim, perhaps feeling that he is being tempted by Satan, resists. The mechanics of a yawn are nothing but the forcing of the blood out of the veins of the neck into the general circulation, where the organs of elimination will remove any poisons.

It must be remembered that only when the body is completely at rest does the heart perform all the duty of keeping the blood stream flowing. Every time a muscle contracts it squeezes the veins in the vicinity. The veins are furnished with little one-way valves, like the scuppers on ships, and every vein-squeezing hustles the blood in it along. The yawn does this for the neck and throat blood vessels.

The congregation shifts arms and legs and squirms about in its pews from time to time, but as these movements are considered innocent, they happen unconsciously, there is no suppressed desire, and therefore they are not contagious. Only the poor neck muscles, which need it most, cannot be relieved except by that ill-mannered yawn. Because everyone knows he ought not to yawn in the face of the minister or senator who is holding forth at him, he resists the inclination as long as he can. When finally the first backslider yields, the example is too much to resist. Nature asserts itself and touches off yawns all over the house.

There would be fewer of these epidemics if ministers, instead of reading their sermons from the pulpit, would follow the example of revivalists, politicians and other spell-binders, and get out onto a wide platform, wave their arms and, above all, walk around, become moving objects. The moving about causes the aim of the listeners' faces to change, including movements of the neck muscles, which make these annoying yawns unnecessary.

Animal yawns are rarely from boredom, but usually from the opposite intense attention. When an animal keeps his neck muscles rigidly motionless for a long time it is likely to be because his eyes are fixed with riveting intentness on something very interesting. A cat after staring hopefully five minutes at a bird and seeing it fly away will often yawn but, like the yawning audience after the big third act climax, she was far from bored. At such a time, if there were several cats watching, the first one to yawn may start the others, but ordinarily yawns are not contagious among the lower animals.

In sleep people do not yawn because their neck muscles are relaxed and the body is in a horizontal position, permitting the heart to pump to one part as easily as another.

When a human being wakes in the morning he usually yawns several times and stretches his limbs. So do the animals, only more so. The dog, roused peacefully from a night's sleep, not only tries to split his head in two, but when he gets up, bends his spine upward into a bow, then springs it downward the other way, shakes himself till his ears rattle, pushes out his head, stretches his legs and goes through a sort of daily dozen, all to chase the blood from its lazing places.

A dog can make his master yawn by example, but it is almost impossible for the master to get the suggestion over to his pet. When he seems to succeed it is probably because the animal was ready to yawn anyway. The yawn is the most infectious movement known, but there are others. If dogs and cats were taught, as human beings are, to think that gaping in public is reprehensible, they would probably, like their masters, suffer from memories of suppressed yawning desires in the past and they, too, would find the yawn contagious.

Many who have suffered from the epidemics of coughing that sometimes sweep the theatre probably think that the cough if not as contagious as the yawn, is second to it. But it has been found that this is not so.

The second most contagious action is rocking. The rocking-chair and the yawn are fairly close together. Pain is almost as contagious as yawning and rocking. This is because the fear impulse is quite as old, if not older, than the therapeutic yawning impulse.

For some reason people who would hesitate to yawn in church or theatre do not mind making a nuisance of themselves by coughing. A yawn hurts nobody, but the cougher, besides the danger of spreading colds to others nearby, interrupts the service, lecture or play. The reason that coughs come in spasms is somewhat like the cause of the same phenomenon in yawns. People in the audience may not realize that they are repressing a tickling in the throat until someone else in the house lets go a bark and the suggestion moves them to do likewise.

The rocker is the healthiest of all chairs, though temporarily not the most fashionable. Gentle rocking does for the whole body what yawning does for the muscles of the neck. Elderly people and those with weak hearts aid their circulatory systems by rocking.

Man has no monopoly on yawning.

Ever animals and even reptiles yawn. The apes probably never yawn, not because they are too busy, like the busy men, but because Nature removes fatigue toxins in some other manner.

The yawn is probably one of the oldest of Nature's simple therapeutics, and we learned all the way up the evolutionary family tree.

The poison which would give us a pain in the neck but for the yawning can be produced experimentally in many parts of the body, Dr. Lewis proved.

The theory to which he was led by his experiments is that pains like that of angina pectoris are due to the accumulation of some kind of poisonous substance in the muscles. To test this theory a number of his associates and assistants submitted to having their arms tightly bandaged so that the flow of blood through the arteries and veins was stopped, much as a physician bandages a patient's arm temporarily when he wishes to measure the blood pressure. The fingers of the bandaged arm then were clasped around a "grip tester," one of the spring devices which measure how strong is the grip of a person's hand. The muscles of the bloodless arm then were exercised by squeezing the grip tester at intervals of one second.

After less than a minute, Dr. Lewis reported recently in a lecture in London, the exercising of a bloodless arm in this way caused the most intense pain in the muscles that were being worked. No one could continue the exercise more than about 50 seconds. The pain became unbearable and the experiment had to stop. The pain ceased immediately, however, as soon as the bandage was loosened so that blood could flow once more through the arm.

There may be natural circumstances, Dr. Lewis believes, where the blood supply may be cut off partly from some set of muscles, like the muscles of the heart, for the blood that the heart pumps does not nourish that organ as it passes through. Instead, the heart has its own small arteries and veins and its own blood supply, like any other organ of the body. If something goes wrong with these heart arteries so that less blood is carried one result is that the heart muscles get bathed in the painful chemical which is not being removed fast enough by the blood. This is what causes the heart pain of angina pectoris.

Probably many other kinds of cramps and pains may be traced to similar circumstances. One of the most painful things that anyone can do for example, is to hold one's mouth stretched open as far as possible as dentists sometimes make their patients do. After a few minutes of this the muscles in the cheeks and face are likely to become extremely painful. The position of the jaws and face muscles when the jaws are stretched widely is such that the blood supply through some of the face arteries is restricted. Perhaps this cuts down the circulation to the point where the pain chemical can accumulate in the muscles. In any event everyone knows that working the painful jaws once or twice after the dentist has finished quickly restores the sluggish blood circulation and abolishes the pain.

In the same way the minister might abolish the pain he feels when the congregation yawns during a perfectly good sermon by getting out of his pulpit and moving about.

THE [illegible] Egypt.

In the days of the [illegible] person [illegible] did not [illegible] a crazy [illegible] that was [illegible]

Most of [illegible]

[illegible] though a lot of hocus-pocus chanting was thrown in for good measure. [illegible] make the medicine work.

The virtues of fumigation were discovered from trying to smoke out the "devils" of sickness, and the elements of anatomy and surgery were learned from the wholly religious process of embalming mummies. These were the fantastic and weird beginnings of modern science, and how superstitions about health and [illegible] have persisted right up to the present day [illegible]

[illegible] the entire process, cause and effect [illegible] someone drowned or broke his neck. Poisons they did not comprehend quite as well. They knew that certain berries and fruits and meat and fish that were tainted would cause sickness and even death, but they supposed this was because there was a "spell" on it.

All ailments that did not come from violence must be from evil spirits or the bad magic of some hostile witch doctor. If all illness had a supernatural origin the only logical cure would be in magic, and some of the magic worked nicely and any way most people get well no matter what the doctor does to them.

The ancients were close observers but loose reasoners. Among all races it was soon noticed that when one family died of a "magic" disease such as smallpox the "evil spirit" was quite likely to attack others. To drive the evil spirit out of the neighborhood they [illegible] the death house with the most [illegible] they could make and [illegible] burned down the hut. This was practically fumigation and sterilization by fire, perfectly good scientific methods.

When the hut was not burned the witch doctor would often place a [illegible] and taboo sign over the door, which would warn everybody to keep away. In its way this was the ancient counterpart of the modern board of health quarantine placard, and no doubt quite as effective.

Many imagine that tooth troubles are a modern affliction, but the caveman had pyorrhea, and Egypt was plagued with bad teeth. Their food seems to have been so full of grit that it wore their teeth down. In mummies of older people the process had exposed many of the nerve pulps, causing the well known symptoms of ulcerated tooth. Many an ancient papyrus shows that the land of the Nile was full of dentists, who must have been given [illegible] special [illegible]

The [illegible] cures [illegible] were almost entirely in the form of magic [illegible] though sometimes they rubbed the juice of an onion on the root of the [illegible] tooth and even made a [illegible] to [illegible] the patient's mouth. [illegible] that the ancient Egyptians ever tried to fill teeth.

The reason these dentists of 4,000 years ago relied almost entirely on charms was that they believed that the ache was caused by a worm which had presumably been placed in the tooth by some evil-minded spirit. In many lands a toothache was supposed to be caused by the indignant ghost of an ancestor whose grave had been neglected. That ridiculous worm theory of toothache spread from Egypt all over the known world and was still going strong in the days of Shakespeare, who wrote in "Much Ado About Nothing":

"What! sigh for the toothache? Where is but a humour or a worm?"

If Pharaoh Tutankhamen had a toothache, they no doubt gave him the best medical attention obtainable. They may have rubbed onion juice on the royal gum and blown pretty smoke in the royal mouth and perhaps done many other strange things. But the chief reliance would [illegible] on the following charm recited by the court high-priest-doctor, probably yelling it good and loud, right into Pharaoh's face so the worm in his tooth could not pretend it did not hear him:

"After Anu made the heavens, the heavens made the earth, the earth made the rivers, the rivers made the canals, the canals made the marsh, the marsh made the worm. The worm came weeping unto Samas, came unto [illegible] Ea [illegible] 'What wilt thou give me for my food? What wilt thou give me to destroy?' 'I will give thee dried figs and apricots.' 'Forsooth, what are these dried figs to me, or apricots? Let me amid the teeth, and let me dwell in the gums, that I may destroy the blood of the teeth, and of the gums chew their marrow. So shall I hold the latch of the door.' 'Since thou hast said this, O Worm, may Ea smite thee with his mighty fist!'"

They had eye and ear, nose and throat and many other kinds of specialists in the days of the Pharaohs. At the end of most of the prescriptions found in the old papyri there is usually [illegible] "The [illegible]" or "M[illegible]" [illegible] the ages [illegible] was [illegible] on most patent medicine labels. There was [illegible] alleged infallible cures [illegible] will [illegible] the patient [illegible] at least one alternative.

For instance, after a long and complicated prescription for sore eyes, which after compounding had to be set in the starlight all night, there were the following three simpler ones:

1. "Thou shalt disembowel a yellow frog, mix its gall in curd, apply to the eyes."

2. "Blood from a pig's heart thou shalt pour into his eyes."

3. "Thou shalt mix yellow sulphide of arsenic in curd and apply."

Some prescriptions were supposed to cure so quickly that they were not safe to use on a patient till the doctor had his fee safely in hand. The following is one of these wonder workers:

"For that which [illegible] Opium, calf's fat, milk. Mix these together, warm them and apply to the ear. The pain will stop immediately. But do not administer the remedy to a man until you have received your fee."

Assyrian prescriptions show their Egyptian origin, but begin by describing the ailment instead of naming it, and while the Egyptians usually say just how much of each ingredient is to be mixed and pounded in a helmet, which was the handy mortar of the times, the Assyrians leave that detail mostly to the imagination. When it is a question of how much fat of a lion to put in, perhaps it would not matter, but with arsenic and [illegible] it would seem rather important, if it was really desirable that the patient should live.

In contrast to all their learned Egyptian [illegible] these [illegible] Babylonians seem to have had no professional physician at all, but most everyone must have been something of an amateur M. D. It was the custom to carry sick people out to the market place and invite strangers who passed by to diagnose and treat them.

The Greeks, with their orderly and penetrating minds, took the medical [illegible] of decadent Egypt and gave medicine a new birth by trying to throw out the supernatural element. They really put things on something like a [illegible] foundation. But in surgery they were handicapped by their religion, which forbade dissecting a corpse. This handicap kept them in a state of anatomical ignorance lower than that of the Egyptian [illegible] centuries earlier.

The Egyptians' religion encouraged study of anatomy because of mummy making. The first mummies were accidents, bodies laid in the dry desert sand, because moist, fertile soil near the Nile was too valuable for a cemetery. As soon as king and nobles discovered that bodies could be preserved and got the idea that it meant immortality, they built spacious tombs for their remains. This defeated [illegible] by letting the air get to the bodies and to correct it there [illegible] technique [illegible] of mummification.

[illegible] the [illegible] were [illegible] that organs [illegible] and at [illegible] jars [illegible] these [illegible] body cavity. [illegible] though they had no idea of the importance of the brain and simply threw it away in the belief that the heart was the seat of intelligence and emotions. That mistake persisted into the present era and still shows itself in the language of the world in such expressions as breaking one's heart, hard or tender-hearted, etc., all attributes of various parts of the brain.

The basis of the mummification process was salting and drying. The salting was accomplished by long immersion in a salt bath, the mummy sitting in a huge jar in salt up to its neck. The drying, which came next, seems to have been done over a wood fire.

The physician who treated the Pharaoh and his big court dignitaries had the wonderful opportunity of dropping in during the mummification, which was really a rough autopsy, and seeing if his theory that something had been wrong with the patient's [illegible] was correct.

Not all these Egyptian doctors were boastful. One who lived 1,800 B. C. wrote modestly that he classified diseases under three heads. He said: "It is an ailment I will treat. It is an ailment I will contend with. It is untreatable."

"There are many persons still living in the British Isles, who in their childhood have been made to swallow skinned mice as a remedy for whooping cough and other childish ailments," says Dr. Dawson. "In April, 1925, after a lecture that I gave on mice and magic in medicine, before the Folklore Society, two of my audience told me of their experience of mouse-eating in childhood and I have since come across a number of other cases. This affords a striking example of the persistence of a remedy for more than sixty centuries."

Mystery of the Murdered Sweethearts in the Old "Love Quarry"

Ohio Police Puzzled to Find a Motive for the Killing of the 17-Year-Old Sunday School Student and Her "Boy Friend" by Someone Who Spent Hours Weighting the Bodies With Carefully Selected Stones, Effaced Every Sign of the Crime and Then Left His Victims' Roadster as a Sign Post for Searchers

Miss Thelma Woods, the 17-Year-Old Ohio Sunday School Student, Whose Cruel and Apparently Motiveless Murder Has Stirred the Police Authorities in Her State.

Police Searching the Pond in the "Love Quarry," Where the Bodies of Truesdale and Miss Woods Were Finally Found.

As 17-Year-Old Thelma and Truesdale, Her Sweetheart, Sat Caressing Each Other in the Little Roadster, Death Came Creeping Up to Them Through the Trees, and Claimed Them Before They Could Have Had the Slightest Inkling of Their Peril—For It Seems That Both Girl and Youth Were Struck Down From Behind, Each Dying Instantly.

Earl Truesdale, Thelma's "Boy Friend," Who Met a Mysterious Death With Her.

MINDS of murderers tend to run [illegible] the same channels—which [illegible] the police usually to reconst[illegible] the crime as soon as they come [illegible] the scene.

For one thing, murderers either leave the body where it fell or dispose of it [illegible] quickest possible manner, for [illegible] that the killer is ridden by the [illegible] a witness may stumble onto the scene and have to be killed [illegible].

Very rarely does a criminal take such pa[illegible] in the murders of 17-year-old Thelma Woods, Sunday [illegible] student, and her sweetheart E[illegible] Truesdale, at the old "Love Quarry" [illegible] Lima, Ohio. Yet having shown [illegible] patience and forethought [illegible] that in the [illegible] they would [illegible] the murderer betrayed [illegible] by neglecting [illegible] and [illegible] person [illegible].

[illegible]

On the [illegible] young Truesd[illegible] and Thelma Woods [illegible] near Lima [illegible] many [illegible] when the [illegible] like the oth[illegible] and [illegible] for home.

By [illegible] had reached [illegible] except one boy and one girl [illegible] there was [illegible] likes to advertise [illegible] 17-year-old daughter did not come home last night. Such [illegible] in the ears of [illegible] young man who [illegible] will show up sooner or later.

Therefore Mr. and Mrs. John Woods masked their [illegible] that Sunday morning by attending, as always, the [illegible] and hoping that Thelma would [illegible] for Sunday school. And the [illegible] tried to console themselves with the thought that their boy had eloped. As the hours passed, worry sharpened Mrs. Truesdale's wit and she abandoned the elopement hope. Reluctantly her husband was persuaded to notify the police.

For no other reason than that it was the most notorious petting place anywhere in the neighborhood, the police drove straight to the old abandoned stone quarry known as the "Love Quarry." Its sixty-foot depths had long since been filled with water, forming "Spooners' Pond."

And there they were confronted by the Truesdale roadster on the brink of the water, with the lamps turned on.

There was no sign of violence, no footsteps on the hard ground, no clews of any sort. The police thought they knew just what to do. The "Love Quarry" was such a popular petters' paradise on pleasant evenings that there must surely have been quite a few other patrons and patronesses of the spot. They rounded up all the most notorious "sheiks" and "shebas" of the vicinity, but could find nobody who had visited the quarry that particular night.

Soon arose a public clamor to drag that pond, but the police resisted at first. To begin with, they had no equipment for working at such a depth and also they were convinced nothing would be found. If Truesdale had killed the girl and sunk her body there, he would surely have fled in his car and not left it with its lights calling attention to the spot. If both had been murdered and thrown in, whoever did it would have removed the car for the same reason. Also, unless the bodies were carefully weighted they would surely come to the surface soon.

But the clamor increased until the police consulted experts in Toledo, who advised dynamiting the pond in the hope of dislodging the weights of any bodies that might be lying on the bottom. Five times the stagnant depths were made to erupt like a volcano, without results, and then, after the sixth shot, the watchers saw the slow-moving patrol boats suddenly show life. On a ledge of rock just below the surface, so that part of her dress fluttered in the ripples, they found the body of Miss Woods and brought it ashore.

One of those almost miraculous things that so often [illegible] in murder cases had happened. Someone, with infinite patience, had wired a lot of [illegible] stone slabs to the body and, besides [illegible], weighted the girl's bloomers with a number of smaller stones. Though the body had been in the water a week, it had been so old, sixty feet down, that her face had not been distorted, nor had gas affected the body. Even if it had, it could never have lifted that load of rock. For reasons not very clear, the hands and feet had been tied.

The only explanation is that in some manner the explosions must have caused a violent uprush of water that forced the body up the quarry side and left it hanging on that shelf near the surface. The autopsy revealed no water in the lungs and that death had been caused by a crushing blow on the back of the head. No amount of exploring would induce the quarry to yield anything more, so pumps were installed and the slow process of pumping out the quarry started. While this was going on, the police arrested John May, 21 years old, a peculiar character, known as the "penny-bile burglar."

Two years ago Lima authorities found themselves entangled in a mystery concerning a chain of petty thefts. Always the loot from homes was the same—cash or firearms. Although some wealthy homes had been robbed, no jewelry was ever taken. Fur coats were overlooked and silver plate ignored. But always small amounts of money were taken and usually a revolver and even shotguns were stolen.

Always, too, police discovered later, May usually was at the police station when such burglary calls were received. All came about the same hour—10 p. m. At that hour May usually dropped in for a hand or two of pinochle with the night [illegible] and often [illegible] the [illegible].

After he was [illegible] in [illegible] he learned May had [illegible] the homes while the residents were at the movies or otherwise away from home. He was tripped up, however, after he had taken some [illegible] and made the mistake of asking police where he could find a [illegible] with information about their value.

Police already had begun to suspect May and purposely had advised the victim of the burglary not to mention the loss of the [illegible].

May avoided [illegible] when his mother, Mrs. John May, overrode the wishes of her husband and had the boy declared [illegible] commission. He was then committed to the State Hospital for the Insane at Toledo for about two years, and discharged as cured.

Thus, with this background and the fact he was friendly with Miss Woods, it was not a surprise when police seized May at once. But try as they might, even with the aid of detectives from Toledo and Cleveland, officers were unable to shake his alibi that he attended the dance with another girl and was home before Truesdale and Miss Woods left the park.

After two weeks of grilling, May was released and then turned to assist authorities in establishing a motive for the crime. May told of his frequent dates with Miss Woods and named other youths who had obtained her favor. He also revealed that the slain girl was more worldly wise than some of her Sunday school companions believed. Much of his story was borne out by Mrs. Woods, who told police her daughter often received gifts from [illegible].

Foot by foot a battery of pumps lowered the water, diving apparatus and submarine lights were installed at great expense to the county, but, as usual, [illegible] wind that blows nobody good." As has crowd thronged the shores of the pond that small fortunes were made by vendors of peanuts, hot dogs, ice cream and soft drinks, who hawked their wares while bootleggers whispered theirs. Then, on a ledge five and a half feet from the bottom, was found the body of Truesdale.

In exactly the same way his hands and feet had been tied and his body weighted with long, thin slabs of stone carefully wired on. Again the autopsy showed no water in the lungs and that both had been [illegible] from the same sort of crushing blow on the back of the head.

With certain murderous gaps, the authorities have a fairly clear picture of what happened that night in the old "Love Quarry." They visualize the boy and girl stopping the car at the water's edge. This must have been followed by a moment of looking around to see if anyone was near to disturb them. There evidently was someone, but the lovers did not know it. Death stole up on the two sweethearts while they caressed each other in the car.

It came unseen and unheard out of the darkness as they were whispering and looking into each other's eyes. The snapping of a twig or the faintest footfall would have made them turn and face whoever it was that stalked them. The two similar blows on the back of the heads of the victims argue that there was no warning, no scuffle and no preliminary attempt to extort money.

The double blow points to two murderers who struck from behind at the same instant. The purpose seems to have been neither robbery nor abduction but deliberate murder, and there appears the great gap in the picture—the motive. Were they [illegible] murderers, or did they mistake [illegible] for someone else?

Whether it was a case of mistaken identity or not, the killers set to work in that place where they might expect interruption and discovery at any moment methodically and unhurriedly to go about the business of disposing of the bodies. They evidently knew the quarry well enough to find those thin stone slabs and, having weighted their victims down so thoroughly that they would never come to the surface under any probable conditions, they pitched first one and then the other into the depths. Presumably they had a car of their own in which they drove away after satisfying themselves that nothing had been overlooked in covering their trail. There remains the greatest mystery of all. Why didn't they drive the roadster away a few miles and leave it beside some other body of water? And why, most incredible thing of all, did they leave the lights of that roadster burning? The authorities do not know. All suspects have been released and no others arrested.

Still murder will out and perhaps, as time passes, still another semi-miraculous happening like the rising of Thelma's weighted body will betray the murderers. Meanwhile, "Spooners' Pond" is filling up with water again but there are no more romances around that haunted place.

THERE MIGHT NEVER HAVE BEEN ANY SIXES AND EIGHTS

HAD some genius of twenty years ago discovered "Floating Power" even the high-priced cars of today might be Fours.

For Chrysler Motors engineers have now overcome the vibration inherent in old-fashioned Fours with a new kind of silken power – power as smooth as satin, as soft as velvet.

Sixes and Eights were created – and Chrysler Motors engineers design some of the world's finest for Dodge, Chrysler and De Soto – because people objected to the constant tremor which four-cylinder engines send up through frame and body to driver and passengers.

Floating Power, new and exclusive to Plymouth, changes all that by eliminating vibration.

The New Plymouth retains all the simplicity, rugged strength, long life and economy of a Four with the smoothness of an Eight.

Just imagine buying in the field of lowest price a car with 56 brake-test horsepower, with actual stop-watch speeds of 65 to 70 miles an hour, with pick-up from a standing start to 40 miles in 9.7 seconds – yet vibrationless as a fine Eight.

Plymouth challenges the world of lowest-priced cars with an exclusive engineering triumph you must try for yourself fully to appreciate.

Plymouth gives you Free Wheeling that brings to the field of lowest price this thrilling feature of high-priced cars. You can shift between all forward speeds without declutching – easily, quickly, smoothly.

Plymouth also gives a new Easy-Shift transmission. You can shift quickly from second to high and back again at speeds of 35 and 45 miles an hour without clashing or grinding of gears even with Free Wheeling locked out.

Chrysler Motors engineers have given the Plymouth a double-drop frame for lower center of gravity, greater safety and roadability, and finer style.

On its rugged chassis, Plymouth carries full-size Safety-Steel bodies, scientifically constructed, safe and permanently quiet.

The New Plymouth is the only car in the lowest-price field that has self-equalizing internal hydraulic brakes – simplest and unexcelled for safety and smoothness.

And Plymouth has an entirely new styling. From radiator to tail light it is a creation of eye-compelling beauty of line and color – comparable with far higher-priced cars.

We invite you to prove the superiority of the New Plymouth. See it. Ride in it. Drive it.

Remember, the New Plymouth challenges comparison with any car at or near its price – in performance, in safety, in size, in luxury, in quality, in value. Among cars of lowest price, we believe you will find nothing to equal the New Plymouth – the quality car for millions, with the Smoothness of an Eight and the Economy of a Four!

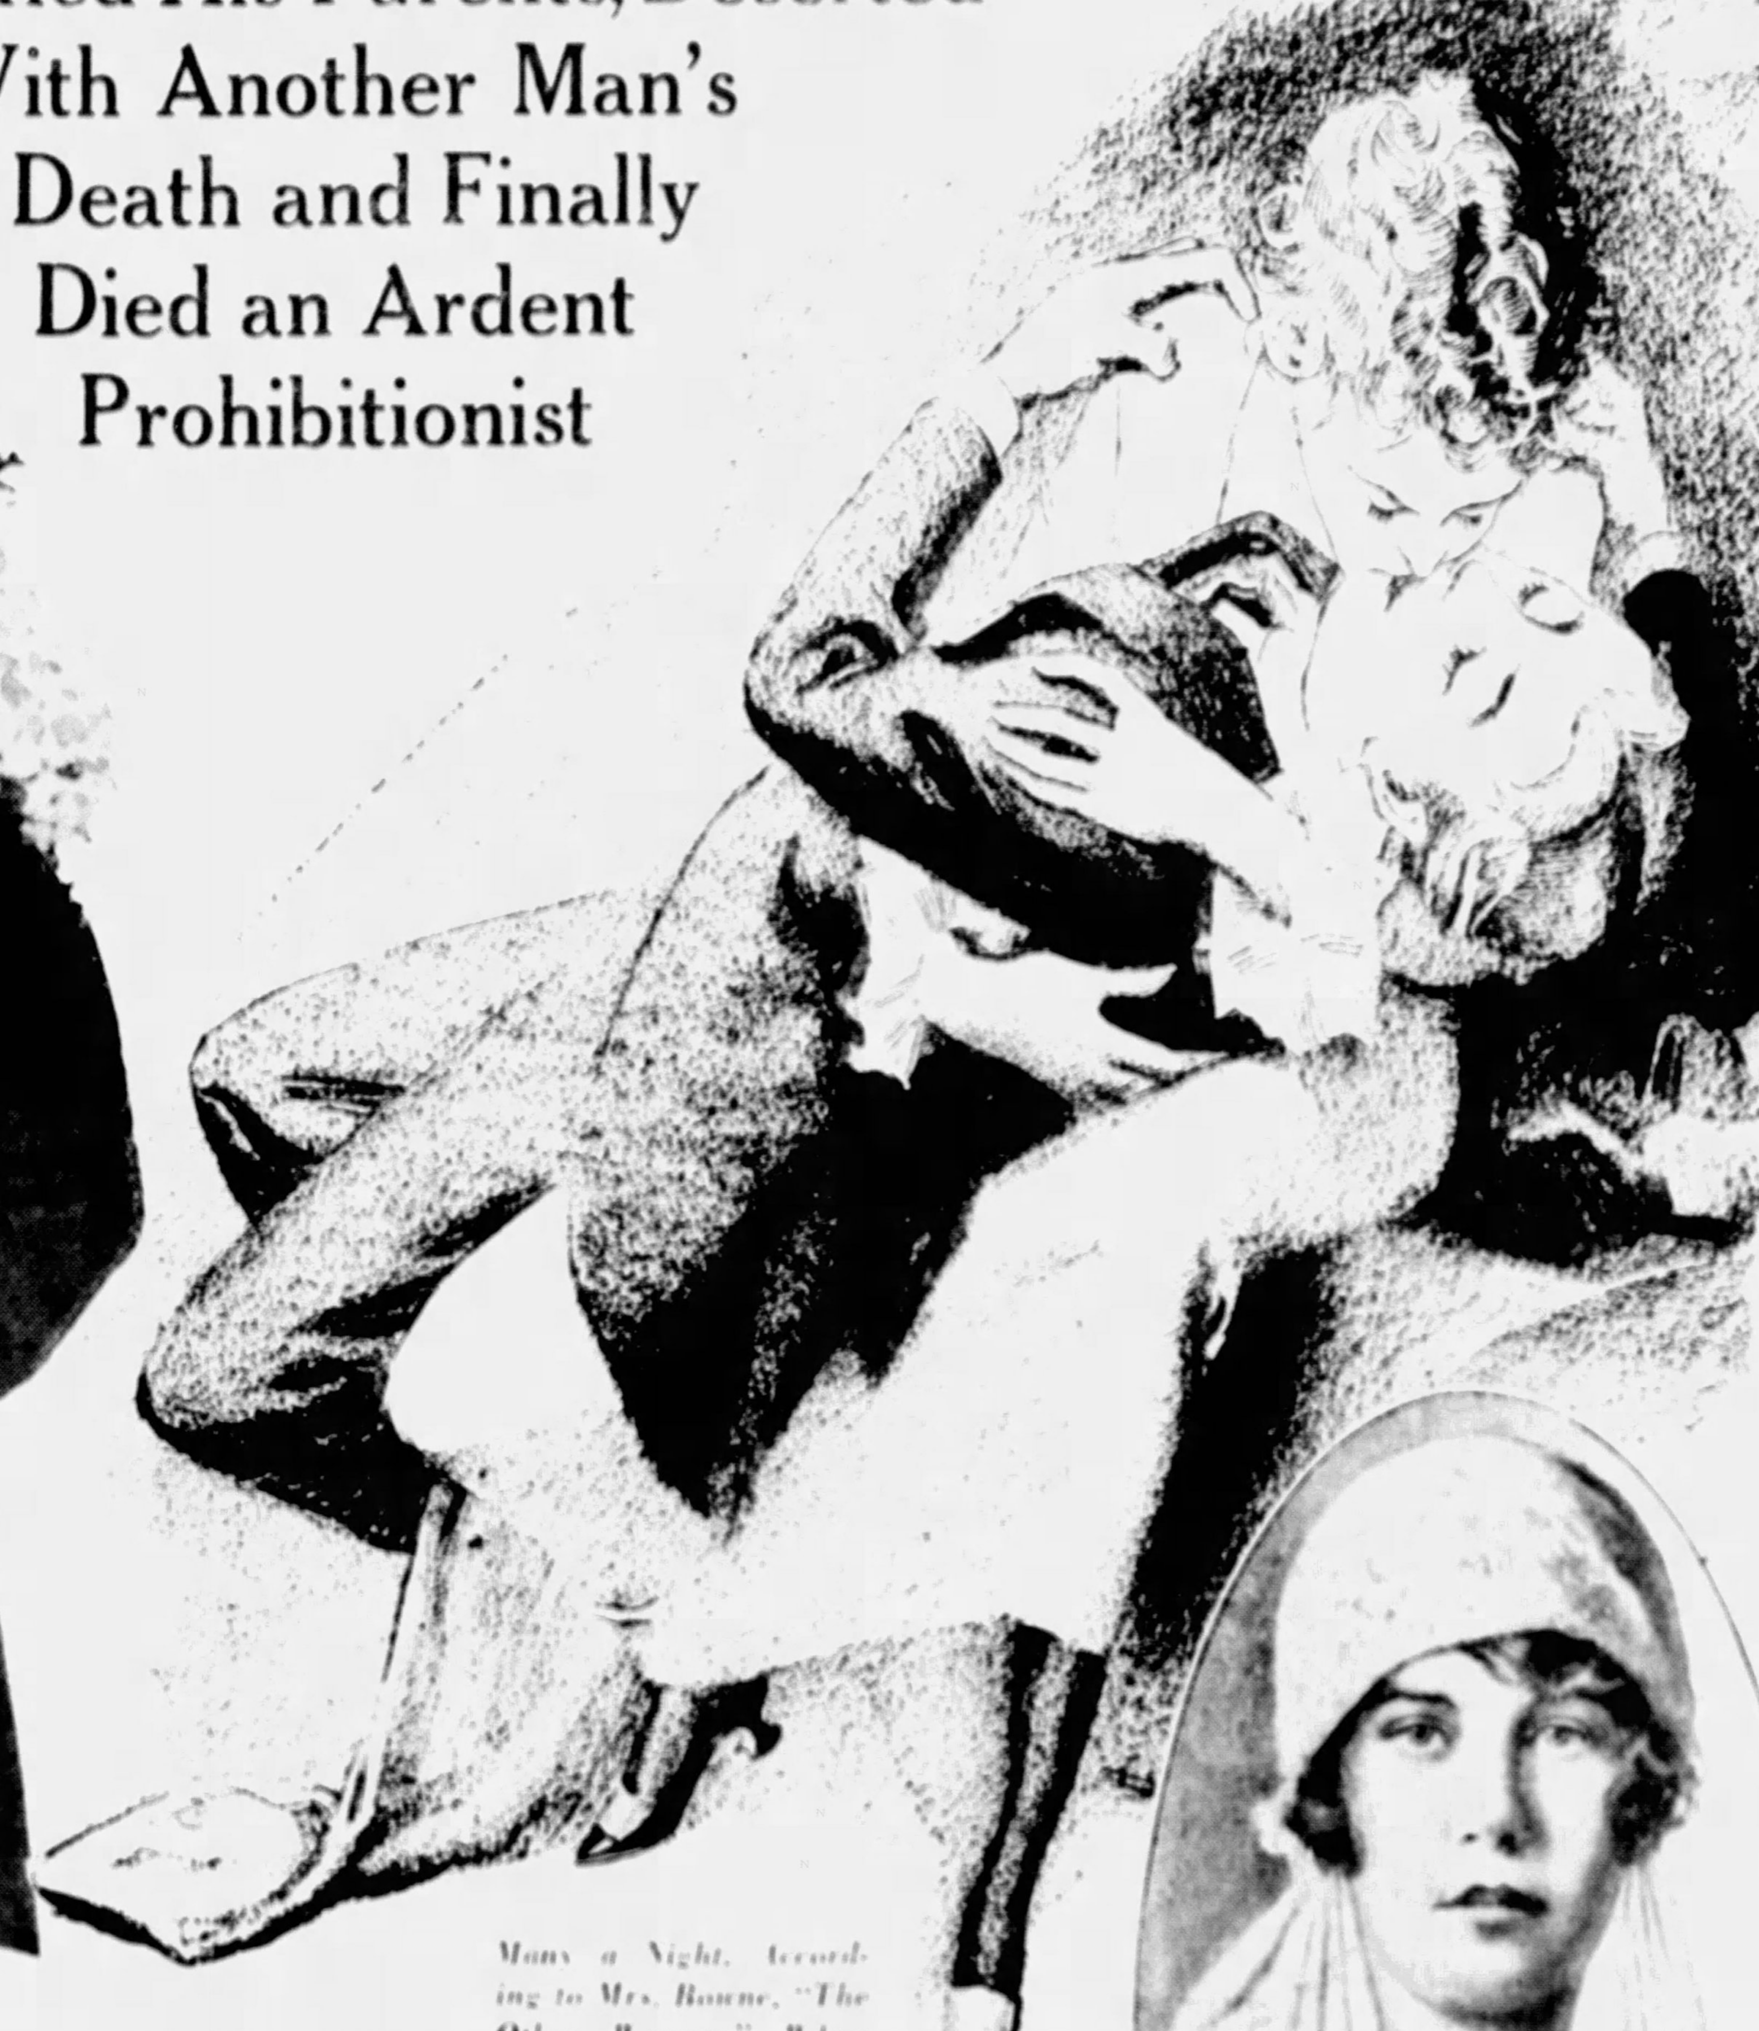
So He Threw Away $10,000,000, Defied His Parents, Deserted His Wife and Children, Eloped With Another Man's Wife, Drank Himself Almost to Death and Finally Died an Ardent Prohibitionist

Mrs. Frances Hewitt Bowne, as She Was When She Eloped With Jordan L. Mott, Grandson of the Great New York Iron Master.



Many a Night, According to Mrs. Bowne, "The Other Woman," When Mott Had Fallen Into the Stupor of Drunkenness, She Had Held Him in Her Arms and, With Lips to His, Prayed Passionately in Her Heart for His Redemption From the Curse That Fettered Him. She Won—But Mott Died Without Regaining Any of the Fortune He Tossed Away.

Mrs. Jordan L. Mott, 3rd, Daughter of the Millionaire British Ship Owner, Sir Ashley Sparks.

The Former Mrs. Bowne, After Years of Suffering and Struggle Have Lined Her Face.

The Late Jordan L. Mott.

ONCE in a while some lucky person, born to all the good things that most people strive for, astonishes the world by deliberately throwing them all away and apparently trying to get as little happiness and as much misery out of life as possible.

One of these queer, wrong-headed characters was Jordan L. Mott, who inherited the famous name and would have inherited $10,000,000 from his grandfather, the New York iron magnate. He has just died near Roseburg, Oregon, after making such a complete mess of his life that it was the inspiration of the famous play, "The Man Who Came Back."

The founder of the Mott fortunes suspected that his grandson was being spoiled and left the ten millions in such a way that the boy would not get the first half till he was 40, and the rest five years later. Furthermore, he was not to receive any of it at all unless he had shown himself to be a sober, reliable, reasonable person worthy of a fortune.

At the age of 22, when young Mott graduated from college, he had only to behave reasonably decently for 18 years to come into a golden fortune, not in the hereafter but right on earth. Meanwhile, his indulgent parents supplied him with all the luxuries of life, including a $20,000 automobile and a private chauffeur. Besides all this he was big, strong, healthy and appealing to women. The lucky youth had nothing to worry about, but [illegible] that he [illegible] made it his business to go out and get some.

That $10,000,000 glittering for him in the near future, instead of steadying young Mott, made him peevish. It was the first important thing this child had been forced to wait for.

"If I've got to wait till I am an old man of forty, I don't want the money," he said pettishly and set out to prove it by painting the town red once or twice a week, so that the trustees of the will heard about it. The more his worried parents pleaded with him to stop his spendthrift ways the more the spoiled child delighted in doing the opposite. His father, J. L. Mott, second of the line, contemplated shutting off his allowance but his mother urged that it was only wild oats and that he would settle down and be good as soon as he met the right girl.

Sure enough, their only son fell in love with Miss Carolyn W. Pitkin of South Braintree, Mass., and, to everyone's delight, married her and settled down. The [illegible] was [illegible] at the birth of a fourth J. L. Mott. Now that he had a child to hand those millions on to, he would take mighty good care to deserve and get them. So everyone thought, but Mott always did the unexpected.

The baby's arrival instead of binding the mother and father closer together caused dissensions. These quarrels Mott used as an excuse for resuming his wild life on Broadway, "Where people understand me." Again the trustees shook their heads and the anxious parents decided something must be done. They pulled in the purse strings by placing most of Mott's allowance in his wife's hands.

As spendthrifts usually do, young Mott promptly punished her for this by creating a scandal that echoed around the world. He eloped in 1917 with Miss Frances Hewitt, a musical comedy star. She was Miss on the stage, but in private life the wife of Walter Bowne, a wealthy business man of Flushing, Long Island. They had moved in fashionable society.

This created a hullabaloo enough to make Mott's respectable parents sick with mortification, but the young wastrel was not satisfied to let it go at that. He contrived the elopement in such a manner that it would keep the scandal in the public eye for a long time. He had himself appointed purser and Mrs. Bowne stewardess of the Indraden, an English tramp steamer sailing from New York to Hong Kong. This fantastic situation of the heir to millions and a runaway society wife, sailing half way around the earth with rough sailors, made it certain that at every port of call they would be visited by reporters and camera men.

Mott's mother was stricken with nervous prostration and could do nothing but moan to her husband:

"Do something—stop him—bring back my boy!"

Mr. Mott did the best thing he could think of. He handed $10,000 for expenses to Hector Fuller, his son's closest friend, told him to follow the scapegrace and bring him back at any cost. Fuller set out after the lumbering tramp in the swift Mauretania. It was the hare pursuing the tortoise, but the tortoise had a good start and unfortunately [illegible] thus adding to the general interest.

By the time Fuller had reached the other side and dashed down through France and Spain to Gibraltar, he found a large delegation of newspapermen and photographers awaiting him with the news that the Indraden had just left. Its next stop would be Port Said, at the other end of the Mediterranean, and unluckily there would not be a P. & O. liner for several days in which to chase her. However, the tramp was slow and at the rate she had crossed the Atlantic the liner should beat the runaways into Port Said nicely.

But the old tub did not travel at her usual speed. Mott had learned at Gibraltar of the pursuit and made a deal with his captain to pay for all the extra coal he could burn. With the beautiful Mrs. Bowne [illegible] to them, he visited and bribed the stokers, who kept up such a steam pressure that it threatened to burst the old [illegible]. [illegible] at the unusual speed, she got in and out of the Suez Canal ahead of poor Fuller, who was obliged to go on to Hong Kong, China.

That objective he reached far ahead of the elopers, but when they arrived Mott only laughed at him. Fuller cabled the bad news to Mott's father in New York, but suggested that the son would soon be out of money and then Mott would listen to reason. Mr. Mott cabled back to wait and do that. He didn't have to wait long.

Soon Mr. Mott, Sr., received word that the runaways had been put out of their hotel for unpaid bills. With satisfaction he prophesied to his wife that it would now be only a matter of days or weeks when the prodigal would have to come back to them. But she wrung her hands and said:

"My poor boy, away off there without any money."

The father thought it would do him good to learn that money is hard to get and isn't just something to be burned. Next came word that everything had been pawned and Mrs. Bowne was picking up enough pennies to feed them by singing in the streets. Again Mrs. Mott wept at the thought of her "baby" among those dreadful Chinamen, but Mr. Mott exulted, for he had another cable stating that the young man was weakening and beginning to negotiate. A week later came this bombshell:

"It's all off. Who sent him ten thousand? FULLER."

Who indeed? The iron magnate looked suspiciously at his wife, who finally confessed. She had been unable to resist her darling's pathetic letters and cabled the money. Fuller came back and reported that young Mott had seen the error of his ways; everything was agreed, the [illegible] had [illegible] sought [illegible] and they were [illegible] when the [illegible] fatal [illegible].

The mother now saw the error of her ways and agreed to let her wayward son go [illegible] and learn sense. Apparently that $10,000 was spent mostly for drink and after that the pair suffered all sorts of degradations, the woman singing in the streets of China [illegible] for pennies. Most of these pitiful earnings went for Mott's liquor.

Many a night, according to the "other woman," unfaithful to her husband, Mrs. Bowne [illegible] Mott had fallen into the stupor of drunkenness she had held him in her arms and with lips to his prayed passionately in her heart for his redemption from the curse that fettered him. In time that prayer was granted most surprisingly.

Learning that his son had [illegible] hopeless drunkard, the father sent another emissary, who found him one day in Shanghai and tried to get him to return to the United States where he could at least drink himself to death in [illegible] surroundings. Mott [illegible] his [illegible] behind.

"What? And leave the little woman who has been so true to me in the gutter? Never!"

It was that manly speech that inspired that famous play of a good [illegible] faithful woman. The play was a great success, but Mott remained the same dreadful self-made failure, falling lower and lower until his parents simply waited for the end.

But it was about time for Mott to [illegible] in Japan not only on the water wagon but as one of the most rabid Prohibitionists in the world. He became editor of a little magazine in Tokio printed half in Japanese and half in English and devoted to vicious attacks on the "demon rum." Having had all the liquor he wanted he wasn't going to let anyone else have any.

As long as Mott was [illegible] the whole world he [illegible] braced up himself [illegible] and [illegible]

Finally a few years ago his wife divorced him, which made the way clear to marry Mrs. Bowne, whose husband had long ago freed himself. They married and now that there was no particular reason for not returning to the United States and father was asking him to do so, Mott thought it would be a good idea. They settled down on Catalina Island, off the California Coast, where Mott made a small but honest living taking out men fishing in his little motor boat. Few of his customers as they tipped him knew that the man in the greasy pants could [illegible] have been worth $10,000,000.

In 1924 his son married the daughter of Sir Ashley Sparks, millionaire ship owner, but he only read of that important event in the papers. He had not been asked. About that time his mother died leaving him a [illegible] of $25,000. It was said that his father was watching to see whether that comparatively small sum would start him on the road to ruin again. If it did not demoralize him, then according to report, the elder Mott was ready to change his own will and leave his prodigal son some at least of his own $2,000,000.

But before anything like that could happen the [illegible] fooled them for the last time by dying at the age of 50 of heart failure, resulting from his long excesses in the past. To round out and make a 100 per cent perfect mess and failure of his life he has managed to leave the faithful woman who dragged down with him [illegible] in her old age.

Strange and Interesting Americans—

WHEN President Hoover made his recent visit to the Virgin Islands, which the United States bought fourteen years ago from Denmark he was so shocked at the grim poverty and hopeless outlook that he remarked "We acquired an effective poorhouse."

If President Hoover ever visits the Philippines the American islands on the other side of the world he would have a much more interesting and varied experience. Almost everything is "wide open" so far as liquor, opium, gambling and most things which are forbidden by the laws of the United States. Under the United States flag lives a Mohammedan Sultan with his wives; in various parts of the islands the tribes of head-hunters still carry on their customs and in other localities slaves are bought and sold, polygamy is common and there are American savages living in jungles which have never been explored.

Mr. Aleko E. Lilius correspondent of the American Weekly, has recently made a tour of inspection of a few of the 7,000 islands seldom visited and unpoliced by American authorities and some of his experiences and the photographs he succeeded in taking are published on this page today.

JOLO (Capital of Sulu),
Philippine Islands, July 7

HAVING been warned that my interviews with the Chinese pirates had made me persona non grata in China, I decided to go over and see some of my fellow Americans in the Philippines.

These Americans under the Stars and Stripes are much more interesting than the humdrum, hard-working, prosaic citizens in the United States. For instance, their habit of chewing betel-nut instead of chewing gum is so startling that it would stop traffic on Broadway. Many of them practice polygamy unrebuked, while others go in for such unusual activities as head-hunting, buying and selling slaves and I heard a bit of piracy and cannibalism now and then.

One of the first places I headed for was Jolo, the capital of Sulu, a group of islands that stretch between the big Philippine island of Mindanao and British North Borneo. Until I was packing up for my trip I had never heard that the United States "owned" an Oriental potentate, a Mohammedan but American sultan. Therefore, I arranged for an interview with His Highness Jamalu'l-Kiram, who is not only the hereditary ruler of Sulu but the spiritual head of millions more Mohammedans, the population of British North Borneo, which he claims should also be under the American flag.

It is from the tropical waters of these interesting islands that many beautiful pearls are obtained, and some of the readers of this article may be wearing Sulu pearls at this moment. Many and strange are the stories of these pearl fishermen, and as my ship plowed along toward Jolo harbor I was told of some of the adventures of the native divers.

Down at the tip of the Sulu group is Tawi-Tawi, a large island almost unknown to the rest of the world. Somewhere off that island is reputed to be the richest pearl fishing bed in the world, but nobody looks for it.

Every full moon the pearl fishing fleets sail into Jolo harbor. Here they stop only two or three days to sell their pearls and also to load provisions. The majority of the owners of the fishing boats are Japanese. The diving is done by pagan natives, the Samals and Bajaos, who are excellent divers, famed for their ability to reach great depths without the use of diving suits, using a heavy stone attached to a rope to take them to the bottom of the sea. Only when their hearts skip a beat or two do they swim to the surface. The basket with the collected shells is then pulled up.

But none of them seeks the lost bed. Their Japanese captains probably would like to take a chance, but they know better than to ask their native crews to try because a fatal curse is supposed to guard the place.

In the days of the previous Sultan, that ruler reserved the right to buy any extra big pearls at his own price, which made him an undesirable customer. Occasionally someone forgot to bring one of the big ones to His Highness, which was all right if the Sultan did not suspect, but, if caught, the penalty was amputation of the right arm with an axe.

However, there was a custom that if the owner could sneak in and throw the pearl at the Sultan he might have anything he saw in the room and it is said that sometimes the Sultan lost on the deal. Things must have been different in those prosperous days, because in my visit I didn't see anything in the palace but the bare walls.

One day, in the early seventies, Datu Ibra Hamil, from Tawi-Tawi, reported to the Sultan a persistent rumor among the Bajaos of the western shores of Tawi-Tawi of an unusually rich pearl bed having been discovered. Pearls of tremendous size were said to have been brought up. It was also rumored that the finder, a very poor fisherman, had fled to Borneo, knowing that the Sultan would not pay him the full value of his find. From Borneo he continued to Singapore where he was out of reach of the avenging hand of His Highness the Sultan of Sulu.

The Sultan called on his old friend, Captain Schuck, who agreed to go hunting for these new rich pearl beds. Captain Schuck's ships sailed for weeks and months and returned finally to report total failure to the Sultan.

The Captain then turned detective, went to Singapore, found that the owner of the secret had sold it to Chinese who had murdered him to prevent his selling it again. Back sailed Schuck to the Sulu Sea on the watch for suspicious-looking Chinese fishing boats. One afternoon he found three anchored in a cove. There was great excitement on their decks and before he could investigate one sent a boat to him. A worried Chinese asked the Captain's medical help; his divers had been badly mauled by unusually ferocious sharks. They had been working for several days on a deep pearl bed, and it seemed as if its treasure was guarded by these man-eating monsters. They had lost five men within the last few days. Of these, three were dead already—the wounded died later.

It soon transpired that these beds actually were the treasure coves of the unfortunate murdered Bajao. The Chinese showed Captain Schuck a few pearls, the largest he had ever seen. The bed lay so deep that for each trip down, the diver could bring up only one shell at a time and it was seldom that any of the divers were able to reach the bottom at all. And in addition, these waters were guarded by sharks, which had attacked and killed five divers.

Using the authority of the Sultan, Captain Schuck commanded the Chinese boats to follow him to Jolo. He took possession of the pearls, which the Chinese gave to him without resistance, and, in accordance with the Sulu law, they were offered for sale to the Sultan.

Pretty soon the story about this tremendously rich pearl bed was known throughout the archipelago. There was also a legend that it belonged to the "King of the Sea," that it was guarded by his "tigers," the ferocious sharks, and that nobody would ever get them.

But legend also had it that if a virgin princess were sacrificed, if she were to be offered to the "King of the Sea" as a bride and if she went down to the depths of the sea, the shells would open themselves and the floor of the bed would rise to the surface and the people of Tawi-Tawi would become the richest and the happiest people on earth.

Fortunately no virgin princess happened to be available or the experiment would doubtless have been made. Rising to the occasion, Panglima Tigpag, mighty Moro chief, gathered a few Bajao divers together and asked them if they were willing to dive for the pearls, should he guarantee that the guarding sharks would not molest them. So feared were these oyster banks now that no attempt to disturb them had been made for the last twenty or thirty years. The oldest Bajaos shook their heads and asked sarcastically how he would go about the matter of keeping the king's guard away. Panglima laughed and explained that he would have a large net knitted and placed all around the spot where the divers decended. They discussed the matter for many a moon and finally found the idea good.

For months the men and women of Panglima's village worked on these nets. Finally he declared that everything was in readiness for the expedition, drums were beaten, fire-crackers were exploded, gongs and kulintangans were played for many nights; and one morning the procession started. The nets were lowered in a circle around the spot where the pearl oysters could be seen deep below in the blue-green depths of the sea.

Down went the diver and up he came empty handed, for he had seen the net bulging inward ominously under the plunges of several man-eaters. But the net had held and his companions pursuaded him to try again, aided by vigorous hammering of gongs, firing of crackers and loud prayers to Allah by the Imams or Mohammedan priests.

Again the sharks charged vainly, and this time the eager watchers saw the man's form follow the pearls all the way down to the bottom. They saw him pick up one great oyster place it in the basket, reach for another and then stiffen as if from an electric shock. He threw away the second oyster, bent over and struggled as if in agony. Then straightening up and turning in the direction he hoped Mecca might be, his breath bubbled out of his lungs in a last prayer. For minutes he stood swaying in the current.

Another diver went down, tied a rope around his waist and with considerable effort he was pulled to the surface dead. Clamped to his ankle was the cause, a giant clam. He had stepped on the great bivalve and its two powerful shells had closed on his foot like a vise. The basket was drawn up and the single oyster in it found to have a large "blister" on the inside of the shell. That blister contained the last of the great pearls of the lost bed. The place was declared cursed and taboo and remains so to this day. Now nobody knows where it is nor cares.

Of course the inhabitants of the more than 7,000 islands of the Philippines include almost all races, shades of color and levels of culture and barbarism and religion. And the Sulus, who are not asking independence now, are the ones

...of all the Philippines who have the proudest history of defending their independence against all comers. From the introduction of the Mohammedan faith in the fourteenth century, and through 300 years of continuous warfare with the Spaniards, until the arrival of the Americans, they were a politically independent people, ruled only by their sultans and datus (princes and chiefs). In the sixteenth century the Spaniards took possession of the rest of the Philippine Islands, but it was not until 1876 that they were able to establish themselves permanently in Sulu, and then only in the city of Jolo, the smallest walled city in the world. The appearance of Spanish soldiers outside of the fortifications usually ended disastrously, and, as recently as ten years ago, American soldiers were forbidden to walk outside the walled part of Jolo unless they were in parties of at least three, and fully armed.

But thirty years of American occupation have finally changed the picture to a great extent. These thirty years were, however, marked by constant guerilla warfare, messy "executions" of outlaws, disarmaments, and rather ruthless semi-military operations of the Philippine constabulary before the rebellious spirit of the Moros were subdued. Today they appear to have been transformed from a piratically inclined, clan-infested, murderous gentry into an industrious nation of fishing and agricultural people.

But the spirit of indpendence did not die. The Moros have little in common with the other people of the Philippine Islands, nor does Islam teach brotherly love toward unbelievers. There is traditional hatred between the Moros and the Filipinos, who are Catholic.

The Sultan of Sulu, who is also nominal ruler of the Moslems of North Borneo, has, as a result of the American occupation, lost his unlimited power over the property and lives of his people; but he still remains the spiritual ruler of all the Moros. There is, however, little doubt that should he unfurl the banner of war for independence, it would automatically become a religious issue, and tens of thousands of the faithful would draw the sword for the freedom of the Moslem Sulu. But a war with the Filipinos would be an uneven affair, because the Filipinos are at the present time given a kind of military training by the Americans, while the Moros have been so troublesome that a policy of general disarmament has been followed in Sulu since 1913. Consequently, a war would probably result in total defeat, if not extermination, of the Moros.

One cannot refrain from sympathizing with the Moros. Dressed in a turban or fez, a gold-buttoned jacket, tight-fitting trousers, embroidered with gold, a multi-colored waistcloth, into which a richly decorated weapon, whether barong, kris or bolo, is stuck, he looks every inch a prince. When the Moro speaks to you he looks you straight in the face and his left hand rests on the hilt of his weapon, not in a threatening manner, but in a matter-of-fact gesture. This weapon is one of his most valued possessions; the hilt is finely carved and covered with gold or silver. To appear in public without his weapon would mean the certain loss of prestige and dignity; the higher the rank of the Moro dignitary, the costlier and the finer the sidearm.

The present Sultan of Sulu, Jamalu'l-Kiram, is 63 years old. He does not reside in his capital, the city of Jolo, but lives with his two wives in his palace, Darol Jambangan, Palace of the Garden, located about twelve miles from the city of Jolo, on the south shore of the island. The Americans have granted him a large piece of land in addition to a monthly subsidy of 500 pesos. He is probably the only man in the world to whom the American Government pays tribute money. Jamalu'l-Kiram also receives approximately a similar sum from the British North Borneo Company, which has acquired the rights to exploit those parts of North Borneo over which the father of the present Sultan, Jamalu'l-Alam, ruled.

There was a tight-trousered, barefooted sentry, armed with kris and rifle, at the gate of the palace when I arrived. It is a huge wooden structure, built upon wooden piling, after the universal architectural style of Malaysia.

Governor Fugate had made an appointment on my behalf with the Sultan, and I was "commanded" before the "august presence" at 10 o'clock next morning. An American friend, my secretary and I had driven in a car from the picturesque city of Jolo, through rice and hemp fields and cocoanut groves that converge into a green valley, flanked with steep hills, to the gray wooden structure of the palace, surprisingly imposing in its loneliness among the tropical vegetation roundabout.

This palace is by no means the only one the Sultan owns. The finishing touches are being put to another princely abode, Tip Tipon, the present residence of his niece, the American-educated co-ed Princess Tahata Kiram, whose elderly husband is doing time in Bilibid Prison in Manila for revolutionary activities a few years ago.

The balconies of the palace were crowded with curiously dressed natives, who chewed betel-nut and stared at us. This betel-nut is the chewing gum of the Philippines, a species of pepper that grows on climbing vines and is native to the East Indies. The nut has a hot and acid taste about as pleasant as a mixture of red pepper and vinegar, gives the chewer the appearance of having bleeding gums, and, in time, turns his teeth black. However, the native is convinced that it is good for his breath, teeth, digestion and most anything else that ails him. As a rule most all the islanders, men, women and children, are devout chewers.

A young man, who introduced himself as Datu Ismail Kiram, eldest son of the heir to the Sultanate, welcomed us at the gate and led the way. We climbed the steep stairs to the second floor, which consisted of a single audience hall. The only furniture was a table, a dozen chairs and a ticking wall clock—an hour and a half ahead. There is only one explanation for anything in the East seeming to be ahead of time, and that is that it is so far behind as to be almost on time a day later. No Oriental would deliberately set a clock ahead, and if the clock was running fast it would so annoy him that he would either get it fixed or stop it.

Not a picture nor a carpet decorated the room. The windows and doors were all wide open and without glass or shutters. To the right was another stairway leading to the upper floor, and at the foot of these stairs hovered the figure of a huge Moro, wearing conventional clothing and a fez, and decorated with a cartridge belt and a huge pistol, which dangled from his hip.

The room was full of Moro dignitaries—a colorful assembly indeed, and garbed in its very best. It had arrived expectant and prepared to be photographed and written up, and there was a lot of glimmering gold, flashy kris handles, brilliant waistclothes and turbans in evidence. The heir to the Sultanate, Datu Rajah Mudah Kiram, was next to be introduced by the very efficient English-speaking secretary to the Sultan, and then about a hundred of the other princes and datus came and shook hands with us. The picture would have been a splendid one of color and flashing jewels had it not been marred by ugly black mouths, filed teeth and ghastly red lips caused by incessant betel-nut chewing.

Then the Sultan appeared. He came down the stairs with short, jerky steps, followed by two retainers, ministers or just plain bodyguards; they all were so gorgeously dressed that it was impossible to guess which were the more important dignitaries.

In spite of the early morning hours His Highness wore a dress suit with a black tie and a pleated shirt with three diamond studs. He carried a wrist watch and held a bejewelled cane in his right hand. He was not a tall man. His short-cropped, gray hair was hidden under a red fez, and, contrary to the custom of most small potentates of the Orient, he did not wear too many jewels. A single diamond ring on his left hand was the only adornment I could discover. His rather firm and heavy jaws were clean-shaven. He had nervous hands, and the color of his eyes was a peculiar shade of greenish-brown.

The whole assembly stood at attention. The Sultan came up to me, and we exchanged a lot of Oriental greetings, which neither of us understood. Then the Sultan motioned us to sit down, and, seating himself at the end of the table, he welcomed me with a few words which the secretary immediately translated.

Then I began my interview. I asked the Sultan's permission to question him on several rather delicate subjects, including the possible independence of the Philippines.

The secretary translated his reply:

"The Sultan asks you to put to him any questions you may desire, and the Sultan also permits you to quote him without restraint."

This was rather promising. So I went ahead.

"I do not favor independence in the Philippine Islands," he began. "We need every one of the blessings that American education and administration have brought our people. After thirty years under the American flag, we are just beginning to realize what that privilege means. I do not want to see your flag taken down in Sulu."

"Still you would accept the independence as such, should this gift be granted the Philippine Islands by the American people?"

"Independence," he frowned. "Independence from what? The granting of independence to the Philippine Islands would not mean independence to Sulu. We will never submit to another Philippine tribe, especially to Christian tribes, and our refusal would mean strife and bloodshed."

"How many men would your Highness be able to gather together in case such an unhappy situation should arise?"

He gave a

the moon. It seemed like an old friend tonight, fat and jolly. Like ... Pan thought, jolly . . .

Under his breath Quarrender was singing the words of the song. Singing them very low. Yet Pan heard them. He had hunched his back and his lips were close to her ear.

"I ask you for a kiss.

You give me just one kiss. . ."

He had danced her further down the lawn, where a large elm tree hid them from view. He stopped dancing. But he didn't let her go. If anything his arm tightened.

"Supposing I ask you for a kiss, Pandora?" His voice was mocking but his eyes were serious.

"Well!" laughed Pan, a trace of breathlessness in her laughter. Her lips twisted crookedly. "You won't refuse me." Although, it's not within the letter of our contract. Yet, you did say that, on occasion, you'd want a man to flirt a little with you. Has that occasion arrived?"

Pan thought quickly. "A kiss? What's in a kiss? I've kissed many boys. Why not Quarrender? Besides, I ... I want to kiss him."

Aloud her own voice mocking, if slightly tremulous, "You may take it the occasion has arrived . . ."

She jerked back her hair, the familiar Pan gesture, and raised her face, oddly white, elfin-like in the silken darkness.

He kissed her. He kissed her again. And murmured. "You dear kid . . ."

And something, maybe the throbbing note in his voice or the kiss, made Pan feel queer, as though she wanted to cry. A strange sensation for Pan, who had never felt in the least like that when any other man had kissed her.

Odd it was, surely. Because this was an old, old scene. Nothing at all to get wrought up over. A Summer night, a full knowing moon, a darkened silver-shot garden, a man and a girl kissing beneath the drooping branches of a large elm tree. ... It might happen to anyone, on any warm flower-scented night.

But Pan drew away from Quarrender rather abruptly. She leaned against the gnarled old tree trunk, breathing rapidly. And a thought came, so unexpected and devastating, she felt her brain reel.

"Why, Pandora Penambles," she murmured in awe to herself. "I actually believe you've fallen in love!"

Mercifully there came an interruption. Down the lawn, straight for those two shadowed figures, came Mrs. Guernsey trumpeting loudly. "Wherever have you got to, Quarrender? I've been looking for you for ages. Suzette's arrived. You know, Suzette Mobray. I'm so anxious for you two to meet."

CHAPTER V.

Suzette Starts to Work.

"SO sensible to come out into the cool on such a hot night," Mrs. Guernsey murmured, as the three walked back towards the house. But she looked at Pan. That look said: "I might have expected this of you, Pandora." She had not forgiven Pan yet for what she had said about the invitation which had never been sent.

Suzette was waiting in the corner of the ballroom. Like royalty, deigning to allow the great Quarrender to be introduced to her. An imperious set to her silken black head, a condescending grace to her, a languor to her movements.

Quarrender thought, in that first moment of seeing her, "She's like a Botticelli Madonna in that blue Old World gown. Exquisite."

Some man claimed Pan and danced away with her. Quarrender went to meet Suzette.

Suzette gave him a tiny ringed hand and a sweetly studied smile. She murmured. "I saw you play at Forest Hills, Mr. Hale. You were marvelous. You'll think me silly, but even then, I knew we'd meet."

Quarrender said the obvious as he started to dance with her. "How did you know?"

Suzette might have said, "Because your aunt is a great friend of my mother's." Which would have been the truth. But instead she chose to be mysterious.

"Oh, I just felt it somehow. Don't you ever feel things, Mr. Quarrender Hale?"

He laughed, and said bluntly, "I certainly feel a tennis ball when it gives me a good hard whack."

Suzette's eyes fell, and her pretty painted lips pouted. "Now you're making fun of me, Mr. Hale."

She looked so upset, Quarrender found himself apologizing, murmuring some drivel about having felt he'd meet her too. Humoring her as he would not have humored any other girl in the room. Suzette had that effect upon men. Four whole dances passed before Quarrender sought out Pan again. To all outward appearances Pan was having a marvelous time. Easily the best dancer in the room, she was cut in on continually. Besides, she could always be relied upon for a new and original line. But while she flirted, obviously, with each partner, she was conscious all the while of Quarrender dancing with Suzette. "Suzette's working the mysterious line tonight," she thought. "All that bunk about feeling things and having met in a past reincarnation. Surely Quarrender's not going to be taken in by it. Surely not Quarrender . . . Yet Suzette is beautiful."

Pan had always been ready to admit Suzette's beauty. But she had never allowed it to disconcert her before. Yet, ever since she had made that startling discovery down in the garden, she found her self confidence ebbing.

And it was four whole dances before Quarrender cut in on her again.

In the typical Pan way she came straight to the point.

"I noticed you made a hit with the divine Suzette. Was it reciprocated?"

Quarrender was enigmatic. "She surely is beautiful."

"Is that my answer?"

He smiled slowly. "Maybe."

"Which means 'shut up' I guess," she laughed. And added because she felt she must know: "Like her better than me?"

"Don't talk rot." The smile died from Quarrender's eyes. He looked really angry. "You're different. We understand each other, don't we, old kid?"

She told him "yes" with her lips, but her heart, over which she seemed suddenly to have lost control, cried out that she didn't want to be so different. That while she still wanted him as a pal, she wanted him as a lover as well. . . She wanted him to kiss her again, as he had in the garden, she wanted the feel of his arms, not as they were now, slack in the conventional attitude of dancing, but tight and possessive. She wanted . . . well, she was face to face with it now and there was no getting away from it . . . she wanted more than anything in the world to be Mrs. Quarrender Hale!

Yet even now the old Pan in her cried an angry protest: "Dumbbell! You! You who scorned the idea of marriage. . . Where are your old dreams of living madly and recklessly, without having to account for your actions to any man?"

Yes, where were those dreams? The new Pan seemed to have forgotten them entirely. Forgotten, too, the agreement she had

What is the effect of modern Ultra Violet Rays upon tobacco? Dr. E. E. Free, one of America's well-known scientists, who was retained by us to study Lucky Strike's manufacturing process, addressing the Illuminating Engineering Society, said:

"The essential effect of the Ultra Violet is the production of better tobacco and of cigarettes regarded by virtually all smokers who have tested them as milder and with a lesser tendency to cause throat irritation."

Here in America LUCKY STRIKE is the only cigarette that employs Ultra Violet Rays in connection with its exclusive "TOASTING" Process — the only cigarette that brings you the benefits of the exclusive "TOASTING" Process which expels certain harsh irritants present in all raw tobaccos.

sure his death wouldn't normally have upset him [illegible]

"But it wasn't a natural death," I pointed out. "He was murdered."

"I know." She [illegible] then seemed to decide upon frankness. "I think that [illegible] Father's got an awful [illegible] that the police blame him for Uncle Harlan's death." Jimmy was silent, and she looked at him quickly. "It is absurd, isn't it?" she asked. And when he still did not answer: "Surely you don't [illegible] mean they are [illegible]"

[illegible]

"You say it's worrying him?"

"Frightfully. He hasn't slept [illegible]

[illegible]

"It's only nerves," he told her. "Nothing that need worry you. He's been taking it on Dr. Waverly's prescription."

"He's been having it on his prescription, but he hasn't been taking it. I heard him walking up and down his room all night. If he'd taken anything of the sort he'd have been asleep, wouldn't he?"

[illegible]

"Of course." Jimmy patted her hand paternally. "Still, I think you're unduly alarmed. Your father is naturally upset by what's happened and you've let your imagination work you into a panic."

She sighed with relief, and I saw that the unnatural tension was leaving her face. "You're probably right. Just telling you about it has made me feel better." She turned suddenly as a voice called from the stairs:

"Chanda!"

"It's father," she said. "Please don't let him know we've been talking, and thank you for being so kind." She pressed his hand and went out of the room quickly as the call was repeated.

For an instant Jimmy listened at the curtains, then, like a flash, returned to the typewriter on the desk. A couple of sheets of manuscript were lying beside it. One of them was crumpled and torn, obviously a discard. With a quick movement he folded the paper and stuffed it in his pocket as the Colonel came into the room.

Chanda Steeb Drew the Curtains at the Door. Then Turned to Us Quickly. "I want to ask your advice about father," She Said.

CHAPTER XVI.

The Colonel Talks

I SUPPOSE Chanda Steeb's picture of the Colonel as nervous and distraught had made me expect some visible change in his appearance, but he looked as grimly unmoved as ever. If I had not twice seen him in the midst of a rage I would have said the man was incapable of emotion as an iceberg. His greeting consisted of a more or less perfunctory nod and he dropped onto the worn leather cushion of the desk chair with something very like a snarl.

"It's my confounded knee," he explained, touching the stiffened joint with his stick. "Been getting worse all week, since last night it's been downright devilish."

"Rheumatism?" Jimmy asked politely.

[illegible]

[illegible] Jimmy glanced up quickly. "I believe it was the Doctor you wanted to talk about today," he suggested.

"Yes." The Colonel paused and traced the design on the carpet with his cane. His voice when he spoke was [illegible] "When I saw you [illegible] last night I'd fully made up my mind to tell you something. But since then I've been thinking it over and I don't know [illegible]"

I was watching the fellow keenly as he talked. If his hesitation was assumed it was, at least, well done. He seemed to find great difficulty in choosing his words and whole phrases were repeated twice as though his mind was troubled by some doubt.

"I don't know whether it's wise to say anything or not. Fact is, I'd hold my tongue if it weren't that I've a pretty good idea the police are suspecting me of the murder." He paused and glanced up sharply as though to see the effect of his announcement, but Jimmy was apparently too busy looking for his cigarettes to answer. "I see you haven't anything to say to that," the Colonel remarked, "and I suppose if you're in the know you couldn't very well give me a hint, but there's been two fellows wandering around the neighborhood whom I never saw before, and last night, when I went out to the tobacconist, I distinctly saw one of them following me."

Jimmy found his case and offered it. "Perhaps," he said, "it's because you lied about your whereabouts at midnight Monday."

The Colonel paused to light a match before he answered. "So they've found out about that, eh? Well, I'm not surprised. I was a fool to lie but I thought it might prevent my being drawn into the mess."

"I understand perfectly. But [illegible]

[illegible] Monday night. I don't mind telling you I saw someone go into my brother's house at that time."

"You know who it was?"

"No. I was crossing the street at the corner and from there the porch is more or less obscured by hanging vines. But the door opened and closed."

"You saw it by means of the light in the hall?"

"Yes, when the door opened it threw an oblong block of light out on the walk. At the time I didn't think anything of it because Singh goes in and out at all hours."

"But you don't think now it was Singh?" Jimmy asked quickly.

The Colonel shook his head. "No, I think it was Dr. Waverly."

"Have you any particular reason for thinking that?"

"A very good one. As you know, the Doctor's house is next to mine. As I came across the street I noticed that the lights were on in his living room, which gave me the idea of dropping in on him for a moment. He'd been giving me some advice about my knee and I thought I'd stop and tell him the way the infernal thing was behaving. When I got up on his porch I was able to see into the front room, and I discovered it was empty."

"You didn't ring the bell?"

"No, it was after midnight. I was afraid the Doctor might have gone off to bed without remembering to turn off the lights. Besides, there was something else that prevented my ringing."

"What was it?"

"The fact that he'd evidently been occupied with some business of his own. You remember he said he'd been going over old letters?"

"Yes," Jimmy nodded. "I do."

"Well, it wasn't only letters he'd been going through. I could see from the window that there were several trunks in the middle of the room and a lot of things which belonged to his dead wife were strewn about [illegible] dresses, and things of that sort. I concluded that [illegible] awake he wouldn't want to be disturbed, so I went on home to bed. Later on, when I thought it over, I decided it was the Doctor I had seen going into Harlan's house."

"Why didn't you mention it before?"

"I couldn't without admitting that I was out on the street. Under the circumstances, I preferred to keep still."

"But Dr. Waverly had no reason for killing your brother."

"He had a better reason for killing him than any other man."

The announcement came so coolly that for a moment its real importance did not penetrate to my brain. When it did I gave an involuntary exclamation.

"Good heavens, man [illegible] they were devoted friends!"

"Yes," agreed the Colonel, "but there's one thing which will part the best of friends, and that's a woman."

"A woman!" Jimmy betrayed real excitement. "You mean to say there was a woman in the case?"

[illegible] the Colonel nodded. [illegible] for over ten years."

"The Doctor's wife?"

"Exactly. The Doctor's wife. I have reason to know that she was madly in love with my brother for some time before she died and I believe that is the reason the Doctor killed him."

Jimmy was staring at the man astonished. "Why should he wait ten years?"

"Because he didn't know it ten years ago. [illegible]"

"But what makes you think he's discovered it now?" Jimmy demanded.

"Because of those old trunks. After his wife's death [illegible] She was Mrs. Waverly's [illegible] you know, and she put everything away for the Doctor to look over when he came back."

[illegible]

"You're sure the Doctor had never been through them before?"

"Absolutely sure. [illegible] and my brother played on the fact. He used to get secret messages from her for the Doctor almost every week. Of course it was easy to quote all sorts of intimate details knowing what he did of the woman."

"Of course." Jimmy's lip curled in disgust and I knew he was experiencing the same anger that affected me at the thought of a man who used his knowledge in such a way.

Fear Of Fear

By Florence Ryerson and Colin Clements

From the Expression on Jimmy's Face It Was Plain That Something Horrible Had Happened.

she was talking about a blackmailing letter. Not the one we had seen, but a second, apparently from the same source.

"It was left in my mailbox some time this evening," she said. "A perfectly horrible letter that threatened all sorts of things."

"What sort?" Jimmy asked. He was trying unsuccessfully to take her coat and lead her to a chair.

"I don't know. I only glanced at it. I suppose I should have gone down to Headquarters to see me," he said. "I'll telephone and have him come up here." He was reaching for the telephone when Norah shook her head.

"He hasn't gone there," she said positively. "I'm sorry, but he doesn't think an awful lot of the way the case has been handled so far. He said if we gave the police the second letter they'd only bungle it again and he was going to handle the matter himself."

"But what is he planning to do?" Jimmy demanded.

"I don't know," her eyes were full of vague terror, "but I'm afraid he's gone to see the Colonel."

"The Colonel?"

"Why, yes. Of course we know that horrible old man must be sending those letters. He's the only one who could possibly——" She suddenly faltered at Jimmy's expression. "You... you don't think it is someone else, do you?"

"We're sure it is," Jimmy told her and exchanged a despairing glance with the Chief, who had risen and come forward.

"What makes you think he went to see the Colonel?" he asked. "Did he tell you he was going?"

"No, but he left the hotel

Arm Or Leg Hair Now Easy To Really Get Rid Of

Utterly Without the Problem of Coarsened Re-growth

By a total lack of stubble, you can feel the difference between this and old ways.

Not only is slighted fear of coarsened re-growth banished, but actual reappearance of hair is delayed amazingly.

A Discovery That is Proving to the Wonder of the Cosmetic World That Hair Can Not Only Be Removed Instantly, But Its Reappearance Delayed Amazingly.

A way of removing arm and leg hair has been found that not only removes every vestige of hair instantly, but that banishes the stimulated hair growth thousands of women are charging to the razor and less modern ways. A way that not only removes hair, but delays its reappearance remarkably.

It is changing previous conceptions of cosmeticians about hair removing. Women are flocking to its use. The creation of a noted laboratory, it is different from any other hair remover known.

What It Is

It is an exquisite toilet creme resembling a superior beauty clay in texture. You simply spread it on where hair is to be removed. Then rinse off with water. That is all. Every vestige of hair is gone, so completely that even by running your hand across the skin not the slightest trace of stubble can be felt. And the reappearance of that hair is delayed surprisingly!

When re-growth finally does come, it is utterly unlike the re-growth following the razor and old ways. You can feel the difference. No sharp stubble. No coarsened growth.

The skin, too, is left as soft as a child's. No skin roughness, no enlarged pores. You feel freer than probably ever before in your life of annoying hair growth.

Where To Obtain

It is called NEET—and is on sale at all drug and department stores and beauty parlors. Costs only a few cents. (USA)

[illegible] I had to admit to myself that [illegible] on [illegible] to [illegible] Hongkong. [illegible] He did not [illegible] but made a sweeping [illegible] to indicate [illegible] Moslems around [illegible] call to [illegible]

[illegible] what about the people of North Borneo who were consigned [illegible] Hongkong?

"I suppose they will belong [illegible] I did not want to understand [illegible] there he explained. "What [illegible] today, commonly called British North Borneo [illegible] territory which belongs to me. It [illegible] only leased to the British North Borneo Company. I am the ruler of the people and I hold it to be the duty of the country, although the British have usurped my rights."

[illegible] period [illegible] North Borneo [illegible] leased?" I asked. "And what will happen after the expiration of the [illegible]

Perhaps the Sultan corrected [illegible] I [illegible] continued [illegible] wonderful territory for a time, a year, a day, or ten minutes, and more shall [illegible] that no one would have [illegible] that the British company had lived up to the letter of their lease. But I have not."

In what respect, Your Highness?

"My father and later I have received a monthly sum of 500 straits pounds, about $2,500 in American money, a compensation for the concession which my father granted to the British North Borneo Company. According to a relative of the lease this amount should be increased periodically with the increase of the profits of the British North Borneo Company. But the lessee continues to pay me the paltry sum of 500 pounds (about $2,500)."

May I ask why Your Highness does not draw the attention of the company to this fact and demand the increase which is due?"

The Sultan made an expressive gesture.

"I have repeatedly done so but the company denies the existence of any such clause which would allow me the increase. Only two copies of the contract were made, and no copy is left. To be correct, it was stolen."

After a pause the Sultan continued:

"You may also note that the British North Borneo Company has continually refused to supply me with another copy of the agreement. I make no secret of the fact that I firmly believe the British were accomplices to the theft."

"That seems to me to be a rather harsh accusation, Your Highness."

"You will change your mind when you hear the details. I went to Singapore in 1891, four years before the Spanish American War, to claim the increase that was due me and to suggest some small change. I was entertained by the Colonial Secretary, and early one morning at sunrise, while my retinue and I were devoting our time to prayer, somebody entered the room where I kept my papers and a few valuables that I had taken along, and stole my copy of the contract."

What did the Singapore police do to assist the return of the document?"

Absolutely nothing. Moreover, many things have happened since then to indicate that the authorities were aware of who had the treaty and why the document was stolen."

What will Your Highness do next in this matter?"

It is my intention either more to request a copy of the treaty and to verify my claim for an increase of the concession money. If I am refused again I will demand the return of North Borneo. Then I will be free to discuss a new agreement with whom I see fit and I would prefer to offer it to the United States and put myself and North Borneo under the protection of the American flag. I maintain that by right the Star and Stripes should fly over British North Borneo now."

How prohibition troubles Your Highness or his subjects?"

The Sultan looked puzzled a moment as the question was translated to him and I noticed that his reply caused subdued merriment. With a perfectly straight face the secretary repeated it in English.

No prohibition of alcoholic liquors does not annoy us at all. We Mohammedans never drink—not like you Americans."

I wanted to ask what he meant by "like Americans" but His Highness arose with a slight bow and terminated the interview.

The Sultan suggested that he would now be ready to be photographed. He was particularly anxious to have a good picture of himself with his two latest wives, one of whom he had married only three months ago. She was only seventeen, and not so bad to look at, not were her texts discolored by betel nut, as is usual among Moro women. In my younger days the secretary explained, the Sultan had had a habit of divorcing his wives after the honeymoon. He had now developed a new habit—that of marrying them. The Sultan's domestic affairs, the secretary added, may prevent him with an heir.

The 50 per cent reduction of the harem is made and consequent addition to the unemployment problem has not been at the order of the American lawyer but accomplished by the hard times which somehow have followed the flag to Sulu land.

At the Sultan's command we now started the important business of photographing the royal family, beginning with the two wives. Ascending a flight of steps we found two ladies resplendently dressed with great pains for the occasion and glittering with what I felt sure was all the royal jewelry in the two Sultanas. To keep peace in the family their husband had given them the pleasure of being photographed first. I guessed and guessed wrong, for an argument arose among their three Majesties.

They don't want their pictures in the paper," said my interpreter secretary.

But after much protest the ladies yielded to the lure of Commander of the Faithful and submitted. They got the habit quickly enough, for after I had taken a score as I waited they followed me around trying to get into everything else I snapped until they became royal nuisances.

The younger wife spoke a little English and my secretary interviewed her while I was taking pictures of the more sedate Sultana. She was strong for the Stars and Stripes but not for life in the palace which she said was a dreadful bore. My secretary wanted to see the women's quarters but the Sultana refused. She added there was a feeling of etiquette about it.

No other city in the world," the young Sultana explained, "has two Sultanas and no man had ever been allowed to look into the palace garden. The Sultan showed us the house or rather shack behind the palace where he resides at present. The lower floor of this impertentious looking building is occupied by the Sultan court where all the domestic affairs of the Moros are attended to. Here also all the religious questions are settled, the Sultan being the highest religious authority among Moslems. The court is a good source of revenue for the Sultan as he receives all the fines imposed by him upon the culprits who are dragged before it. He especially requested me to snap a picture of him with his two bodyguards flashing their wavy krises in the courtroom.

Here was a Sultan who wished to transfer a large and rich piece of real from the British to the American flag and guaranteed in advance to make the inhabitants like it. Two seems worth looking into. Also it was a serious charge that the British had stolen a copy of the lease and on the strength of it were wrongfully withholding the best part of his dominions from him.

So I went to Sandakan, the capital of British North Borneo. There I concluded, I should stand the best chance of ascertaining the truth of the Sultan's surprising statements. The customs authorities at Jolo very kindly arranged for my passage on the revenue cutter Mindoro. The cutter had been placed at the disposal of J. C. Early adviser to the Governor General of the Philippines in matters pertaining to non-Christian tribes, and the governor of Sulu, James R. Fugate, who were making an inspection tour throughout the southern archipelago and touching Sandakan in British North Borneo. We arrived at Sandakan on a holiday, but the British Government offices were not closed, and the Government Under Secretary, Mr. F. A. Pearson received me.

Now since the visit of Major Alexander Powell a few years ago journalists have been more or less taboo in Sandakan. Major Powell thoroughly scandalized Sandakan and his articles even caused questions in the British Parliament. It is unfortunate but a Sunday comes [illegible] with opium dens, fan-tan and other vices [illegible] openly by the Chinese and owned by the administration of the British North Borneo Company, were declared [illegible] from the [illegible] scene fees.

My card openly stated my occupation and Mr. Pearson was on his guard. I stated to him what the Sultan of Sulu had told me in general and requested to see the copy of the official treaty. It could not be found. However I was shown the company's charter dated November 1st 1881 but the latter did not contain the copy of the original treaty. And then Mr. Pearson admitted that a copy of the original lease was kept in London but if I wrote to London for it I was sure Mr. Pearson if he himself did not think it rather strange that the very important Sandakan Office did not have a single copy of such an important document. In reply he only shrugged his shoulders.

To my last question as to the status of Sulu he categorically refused a statement of the sort or even discussing the matter, often had I used this to induce him to prove his case of a misappropriation of the mission money. The Under Secretary mournfully retorted:

Oh, he always want more money."

This ended the interview because somebody higher up must privately overheard the conversation. Mr. Pearson excused himself saying he was [illegible] conference in an adjoining room.

From conversation with the local dato many of whom visited the American officials on board the Mindoro, I was very to see that they still look up to the Sultan of Sulu as their rightful ruler.

Whenever the Sultan visits Sandakan the British guns boom a royal salute and the troops turn out. But this Mr. Pearson and smilingly characterized as "just plain rumor."

The American-educated, royal Princess Tahala, [illegible] already mentioned, might have become the heiress to succeed the present Sultan if it had not been for her husband's [illegible] and her failure to [illegible] and [illegible] to Sulu as a girl. The United States [illegible] is giving her an education at the University of Illinois that [illegible] would become a [illegible] and train her country. It is said [illegible] Abbe. It was hopefully planned that she would be a nice little schoolma'am under a Filipino Christian principal in that Moslem country.

But this did not seem dignified enough for a woman born to rule and descended from an unbroken line, within the traces back for centuries of noble Arabian blood, to Mecca itself. She preferred to be a real Princess and seeing that her strong clothes made the other women prance, reverted to native costume, a fact went across again completely much to the displeasure of United States officialdom and to the approval of her own people.

While the Government was contemplating this and backsliding her husband and his followers in protest against what they considered political outrages, shut themselves up in a cota or fort, hoping that their American lords and masters would take notice. They did by sending the constabulary with trench mortars and bombing the cota, killing 29 men and six women without so much as a wound in return. The Princess and her consort fled with the survivors into the jungle, where they were pursued and captured in the foothills of Mt. Maligay. Brought back to Jolo the data lost his liberty and the Princess her hope of ever ascending this queer little American throne, with its slightly dubious claims on North Borneo.

Fear Of Fear

By Florence Ryerson and Colin Clements

almost an hour ago and after he'd gone I began to worry. I tried to get him at his home, but he wasn't there nor at his club."

"But that doesn't prove he's gone to see the Colonel."

"I know, but just before he left he told me to go to bed and not worry because, by hook or crook he'd have those papers in the morning. I was too mixed up to think clearly at the time, but afterward I realized he must be planning to go up to Russian Hill and get them tonight." She broke off and wrung her hands with a little helpless gesture. "Oh, please, please go up there and stop him. I'm afraid of that terrible place."

"Don't worry," the Chief spoke comfortingly. "We've got men watching the Colonel. They'll see that nothing happens."

"Yes," Jimmy echoed the assurance, "they won't let him get into any trouble." But I noticed he was crossing to the closet where he kept his hat, and the Chief was about to follow when the telephone rang.

For a moment no one moved to answer. We stood eyeing the thing as though it were a poisonous snake, then Jimmy crossed to his desk and picked up the receiver. From the expression on Jimmy's face it was plain that something horrible had happened, but just how horrible we did not suspect even when he hung up the receiver and stood staring at the floor like a man who is suddenly stricken. For the space of a breath he stood so, then he swung around and put his hand over Norah's, his eyes were very kind as he looked down at her, kind and pitiful.

"It's no use trying to keep it from you, my dear," he said, "because you will have to know sooner or later."

She caught her breath in a little gasp. "It's Dick! He's been hurt!"

"No; it's the Colonel. He's been killed—and Dick has been arrested for the murder."

We got into our coats in silence.

It was misting when we reached the street and climbed into the police car. There are three hills between Jimmy Lane's apartment and the Grant house, but the land might have been as flat as a pancake for all the attention the driver paid to them. The car soared up breathless ascents and coasted down sickening declines at a speed which should have been terrifying, but which seemed, at the moment, all too slow.

Jimmy was sitting beside me in the tonneau with Ruggles in his lap; the pup had followed when we hurried out the door and, much to my surprise, Jimmy did not send him back. He rode now, one hand upon the dog's collar, his eyes fixed upon the darkness ahead, and, from his expression of utter weariness and despair, I knew he was blaming himself for the new disaster which had fallen upon Dick Stoddard.

"It's impossible that Stoddard should be guilty," he said utterly manly impossible."

"I wouldn't be too sure until we get there," the Chief warned gloomily. "You don't know anything about the circumstances."

"I don't need to know. He might, conceivably, have killed one man accidentally, but two! Why, the thing's fantastic! It belongs in the category of bad dreams."

The Chief did not reply and it was apparent that he, too, was bewildered by the turn of events. Even Corrigan, who was accompanying us on the strict understanding that no story should go forth unless it was okayed by the Chief, was brooding glumly in his corner.

Nothing more was said until we reached Russian Hill, where we found officers guarding the door of the lower house. That it was the lower house and not the Colonel's surprised us, but there was no doubt the excitement centered there, for a babble of voices sounded from within.

In the upper hall a police surgeon was talking with Dr. Waverly, who was dressed in pajamas and a woolen bathrobe.

"Where is the body?" the Chief demanded, and, without speaking, the doctors turned and stepped aside so that we had a clear view of what lay on the floor between them.

I had been expecting that the body would be upstairs, in the room overhead, and the sight of it came as a double shock. It was lying at one side of the staircase, face down, arms extended, the head twisted at a grotesque and unnatural angle.

"Neck's broken," the police surgeon explained. "Snapped off short from the fall."

McCarthy hustled forward from the rear of the hall. "He was thrown from that landing up there." He pointed to the square space at the head of the stairs. "Stoddard was choking him when he fell over the banister."

"How do you know?" Jimmy asked quickly, and McCarthy turned to the police surgeon.

"You tell 'em, Doc, you can make it clearer."

"There are unmistakable marks of strangulation," the surgeon explained; "protruding eyeballs, tongue swollen and congestion. Also there are the marks of Stoddard's fingers on his throat."

"How do you know they are Stoddard's?"

"Because he admits it," said McCarthy.

"He admits killing him?" I have never seen such blank astonishment as showed in Jimmy's face.

"No; he hasn't confessed to the killing, but he's admitted that he choked the Colonel. What he says is—"

"Never mind that now," the Chief interrupted. "We'll hear his story in a minute. What I want to know is how this could happen when you were supposed to have men watching the place."

McCarthy flushed. "I did have men watching, Captain. The Colonel stayed in his own house all day, but at ten-thirty he came over here and went upstairs. Then, in about half an hour, Stoddard came along and rang the bell. The boys didn't have orders to stop anyone from going in, so they let him get by."

"How'd he get into the house?"

"The Colonel opened the door himself, Kellogg says. He's the man I had on the front of the house. Wilson was on the back. I landed a moment later to give them some orders and I couldn't help wondering what Stoddard was doing up there, so I moved up on the porch to listen at the window. I heard a lot of arguing going on way off upstairs. It finally got so hot that I'd just about decided to break in when it quieted down again. I didn't hear anything for a minute or two, then someone started coming downstairs. Whoever it was only got about half way down, then started back up again. I guess it was about two minutes later, there was a sort of moan, then the most awful thud. Of course I started for the door, and just as I was getting it open Stoddard came running downstairs full tilt. He grabbed me, kind of crazy like, and sung out, 'There's a man hurt upstairs, I got to get a doctor.' Course I wasn't going to let him get away, so I sent Kellogg for Dr. Waverly and made Stoddard go upstairs with Wilson and me."

McCarthy paused and looked around to make sure of our attention, before he continued. "The lower stairs were kind of dark but there was a light in the hall, and when I got up here it didn't take a minute for me to see that the Colonel was dead."

"Was he lying exactly as he is now?" Captain Hemming asked.

"Yes; the Doctor didn't have to move him because a baby could see there was nothing to be done. His neck is twisted clear back."

"What did you do next?"

"Took out a pair of handcuffs and slipped them on Stoddard, then went down and called Headquarters."

"Without looking into the study upstairs?" Jimmy asked.

"Sure. Why should I look in the study?"

"To see if there was anyone there."

"There wasn't. Wilson looked later."

"After the culprit had got away," Jimmy suggested, and McCarthy shook his head.

"Nobody could have got away, Mr. Lane. There's only one staircase in this house, and the telephone's right on the landing. I could have seen anyone coming from the study."

Suzette laughed

"Hello, you two, enjoying yourselves?"

Quarrender sprang to his feet. But he did not look in the least embarrassed or guilty, only mildly amused.

"Come and join us, Pan. I'll send for another drink."

He was so beautifully friendly, Pan wanted to shake him, hit him, throw him on the floor and trample upon him. She was in that sort of mood.

"No thanks. I haven't time," she said looking him full and savage in the eye. "I'm playing tennis. Must get some exercise, you know. I've been getting disgustingly fat lounging around with you."

Suzette laughed lightly. "Well, I'm glad I've taken him off your hands so you can get your exercise, Pan." Her tone was gay raillery so charming it was hard to take offense.

"I'll send you a calendar next Christmas, twelve months in thanks." Pan flashed back at her.

"Oh, girls, girls," Quarrender mocked them. "I feel like a mangled corpse between the two of you."

"You would be a mangled corpse right this very minute if I had my way," Pan thought privately. But aloud, "I must hurry. Sandy's waiting."

Pan played a fast and furious game of tennis that afternoon. Some of her shots were positively savage. One volley went right on to the Club Veranda, right to where Suzette and Quarrender were sitting, knocking the glass of iced tea all over Suzette's obviously new gown.

When after the game, Sandy said tentatively, "Too much to hope you'll come to the Club dance with me tonight, Pan?" She answered, glancing sideways to where Suzette and Quarrender still sat talking. "Sure I'll come, Sandy. Buzz along for me about nine, will you?"

She had too much pride not to go to the dance.

Hot Weather Recipes

The Well-Known Writer and Lecturer on Cooking.

Sandwiches

SANDWICH bread should be at [illegible] hours old. White, graham or Boston brown bread may be used. Two kinds are frequently used in the same sandwich. Slice bread as thin as possible, removing the crust if for a dainty luncheon or tea, leaving the crust for pudding, croquettes, etc. Begin early on the bread if preparing the sandwiches for more substantial meals. To give variety bread may be cut in fancy shapes with sandwich cutters. The center may be removed from the white of brown bread sandwich with a tiny cutter of a shape to fit, and the hole filled in with a little piece of bread of contrasting color. Always spread the butter until perfectly smooth.

Nut Bread Sandwiches.

CUT nut bread at least 24 hours old in thin slices. Spread with creamed cottage cheese and put together with jam, jelly, marmalade or cherry jam.

Lobster Butter Sandwiches.

CREAM ½ cup butter, adding slowly a few grains salt and paprika and sifted or pounded lobster coral to color. Spread between thin slices of white or graham bread.

Sardine Sandwiches.

POUND sardines with an equal amount of sifted hard cooked egg until smooth. Moisten with a little salad dressing and spread on crackers or between thin slices of bread.

Mint Sandwiches.

MASH cream cheese until smooth, with enough cream or salad dressing to moisten. Season to taste with salt, pepper and finely chopped spearmint leaves. Color a delicate green with vegetable coloring. Spread between thin slices of white bread.

Watercress Sandwiches.

PICK over, wash and dry tender young cress. Finely chop and mix with creamed cheese, seasoned to taste with salt and pepper. Spread on thinly sliced graham or white bread, roll a little and secure in place with toothpicks. Wrap in damp towel until serving time.

Date Bread.

MELT 2 tablespoons butter in 1 cup scalded milk and add ½ teaspoon salt, ¼ cup molasses and 1 cup chopped dates. Soften 1 yeast cake in ¼ cup scalded and cooled milk. Add the other ingredients. Beat in 3 cups whole wheat flour and 1 cup white flour and mix to a dough, adding as much white flour as needed. Knead the dough until smooth and elastic. Shape into a loaf and when again light bake 1 hour.

Ginger and Cheese Sandwiches.

SPREAD finely chopped preserved ginger between thin slices of graham bread spread with softened cream cheese.

Russian Egg Sandwiches.

PRESS 2 hard cooked eggs through potato ricer. Mix with ¼ cup stiff mayonnaise, 1 tablespoon chili sauce and ¼ teaspoon salt. Spread on thin slices of white or graham bread, cover and press together.

Horseradish Sandwiches.

CREAM ½ cup butter, add 1½ teaspoons lemon juice slowly, beating constantly, and gradually beat in ¼ cup grated horseradish and a few grains salt. Spread between thin slices of graham bread.

Savory Sandwiches.

BOIL 6 or 8 frankfurter sausages. Chill, remove skins and pass through food chopper. Season with well seasoned mayonnaise and a little prepared mustard. Spread between slices of graham bread.

Limeade.

SQUEEZE the juice from 6 limes and 1 lemon. Put in a beverage shaker. Add 1 egg white and 3 drops of Worcestershire sauce. Fill with charged water and crushed ice and shake vigorously. Sweeten to taste with powdered sugar. Serve in tall chilled glasses.

Peanut Bread.

BEAT 1 egg with ¾ cup sugar, add 1¾ cups milk and 1 cup parched peanuts that have been passed through food chopper. Mix and sift 4 cups flour, 1 teaspoon salt and 3 teaspoons baking powder. Mix well, turn into a greased loaf bread pan, let rise for 15 minutes and bake about 1 hour in a moderate oven.

Mint Punch.

DRAIN the green syrup from a bottle of mint cherries. To the syrup add ginger ale to fill tray of mechanical icebox. Sprinkle crisp mint with powdered sugar. Let stand an hour or longer. To 1 quart sweet apple cider add 1 quart ginger ale and the crushed mint. Serve in tall glasses with the mint cherry ice and garnish with mint cherries and sprigs of mint.

BOTH JUDGED PERFECT BY HEALTH CLINIC

Mary Jean and Georgia, real belly health daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Chester J. Bonadio, Oconto, Wis.

EVERY MOTHER of a bottle-baby should read this letter from the mother of the two adorable children pictured above.

"I have two girls, age six years and eighteen months. The oldest girl was raised on Eagle Brand exclusively and the baby was put on it at six weeks old as she was not gaining.

"They were raised on this formula on the advice of my physician and my mother who has raised fourteen (14) husky children of her own besides recommending it to her many friends and neighbors in difficult feeding cases.

"When I wrote home for her advice she said, 'By all means use Eagle Brand. I just suggested it to one of my neighbors whose baby was starving and you should see the little fellow grow.'

"Needless to say I followed her advice and the pictures tell the rest of the story. They were recently judged perfect at a health clinic. Such perfect teeth. And straight legs! . . . Both children walked before they were one year."

(signed) Mrs. Chester J. Bonadio,
584 Brazeau Ave., Oconto, Wis.

If your baby is not gaining as he should, we suggest that you and your physician consider Eagle Brand Milk. Send for two free, helpful booklets. The new and greatly enlarged edition of "Baby's Welfare"—a complete and authoritative book on every phase of baby care and feeding. And "The Best Baby"—a beautiful little book, illustrated in color, for keeping records of baby's growth and development. Mail the coupon today.

IVORY to the rescue—

Three's a crowd!

My, what dirty hands!" says Bella to her brother. Better get busy with Ivory before Dad catches you. That's the way she gets rid of Bobby when he butts in on a heavy date with her boy friend!

Bella has plenty of dates, too, with the new Ivory Snow that dissolves instantly in lukewarm water. Since a salesgirl told her to use Ivory—not one pair of cotton stockings nor one silk frock has faded. Bella's stepping out a lot now. The boys fall for a girl who always looks like a million!

A hand-out for Mrs. Busy

Mrs. Busy could hardly keep track of the extra guests when Mr. Busy brought them home. Mrs. Busy: I'm going to get a [illegible] Thought he was so jealous. Mrs. Busy is so jealous! Mrs. Busy [illegible] because she does [illegible] Ivory—what to keep [illegible] "I don't have much time," Mrs. Busy says, "but Ivory keeps my hands looking wonderful."

Mr. Busy means business

When Mr. Busy yells "Where's the Ivory?" Mrs. Busy drops everything to deliver a cake to the bathroom door. Mr. Busy says that stingy little cakes of perfumed soaps are tomfoolery. The pesky little things always sink. "Nothing like Ivory lather," thinks Mr. Busy reaching for the cake that floats. So he lathers his head, too! After a time, Mr. Busy heaps more Ivory lather on his face to get a smooth-feeling shave.

Toodles bawled when Mrs. Busy wanted to take his flannel duck away. "But it's ditty," explained Mrs. Busy. "I'm going to give it an Ivory bath—just like the ones you've had all your life." Yes, indeed, since the day the doctor said "Ivory," Mrs. Busy hasn't let anything but Ivory get near Toodles' sensitive skin.

For how many of these purposes have you tried IVORY?

Shampoo . . . [illegible] or the new [illegible] Ivory Flakes.

Piano keys . . . [illegible] keys yellow.

Painted woodwork . . . stronger soaps eat off the gloss.

Enameled refrigerators . . . The alkali in strong soaps affects enamel.

Spots off carpets . . . Dip a brush into thick Ivory suds and apply to spot. Sponge off with cloth. You can clean Oriental rugs this way.

Parchment lamp shades . . . see kid shoes.

Linoleum . . . Ivory makes it wear longer. Strong soaps actually attack the linoleum.

And as a trail-blazer Madelon has come to the rescue many times before. She spends her week discovering the newest news . . . for Fashion . . knickknacks for your home . . . ways to reduce . . . and all the odds and ends women like to hear about. Follow her trail, and you'll come "out of the woods" in short order!

Just the place to buy furs! The owner is a master craftsman of his business, noted all over town for his wonderful values. Madelon goes to see him every week.

"If you seek the truly unusual" is a good slogan for this charming shop. Madelon thinks it is a marvel for smart home furnishings.

Every Sunday Madelon's write-ups appear as "Madelon's Mirror" in the Society Section of the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph. Cultivate the habit of watching for this . . . it will help you to smarter shopping.

FINE BIRDS FLOCK TOGETHER.
Mr. and Mrs. Ben Lyons—she is Bebe Daniels—have a penchant for brightly hued parrots, and here they are shown with a few of their family of chatterers.

When you go to buy coffee —think of an orange

COUNTRY CLUB . . . A blend of the choicest coffees from noted plantations. Sealed in vacuum, immediately after roasting and grinding, to preserve its full strength, flavor and aroma.

HER GRACE . . . A new blend of coffees from Colombia and Brazil that produces an unusually fine flavored beverage. Sealed in a bag immediately after roasting, and ground for you at the time of purchase.

FRENCH . . . The best coffees grown in four countries give this blend its rich, mellow character. Packed in the new lock-top can, ground for you when you buy it, to suit your needs.

JEWEL . . . A mild, even-drinking coffee of unusual body and bouquet. Millions of pounds of this most popular Brazilian blend are sold every year.

THINK of the tight, tight skin that Mother Nature wraps around the orange to keep the flavor in. That will give you some idea of the way the flavor is sealed in every little coffee bean.

Mother Nature is careful to build a little cell around each tiny drop of oil in the coffee bean. But the minute the coffee comes out of the roaster, this flavorsome oil gets adventuresome. It wants to get out. And a good deal of it does get out unless the coffee leads a fast life—between roasting time and drinking time.

Now you know why the fresher the coffee, the better it is in flavor. Now you know why Kroger rushes the coffee from the roasters right to the stores. No in-between stops. No warehouses. It's out of the ovens, into the packages, and onto the shelves—where it never lingers long.

You just can't buy fresher coffee or better coffee. And you get it for less—because Kroger imports millions of pounds every year, direct from the plantations, blends it and roasts it and retails it direct to you. Choose your coffee from any of these four brands—taste what a difference freshness makes!

Rushed from the roaster to you
